Thank You Gay Wasserman For All You Have Done

By Dan Rattiner

Thank you, Gay Wasserman. We couldn't have made this trip without you.

Two weeks before Christmas, in planning for a trip to Central America to visit the Mayan ruins, I discovered that my passport was nowhere to be found. I'd need a new one. And the trip was only twenty five days away.

This turned into a very big deal. If you lose your passport, you can go to certain local post offices during certain hours and apply for a new one. They send the application off to wherever it is they process passports and in just six weeks, voila, you have a new passport. The cost is about $85.

But six weeks was too long. What other rules were there? Well, for an extra $55, they put your application on a fast track and you get it back in ten days.

Researching further, I found that here in the Hamptons, there are only two post offices that are designated passport application centers. They are Amagansett and Southampton. Since I live in East Hampton, I had originally intended to go to Amagansett that morning, December 8, but I was also preparing to take a trip to Manhattan on the Jitney in the afternoon, and as it turned out, the preparations for the trip took longer than I thought and time was tight. I rearranged the schedule to take the Jitney to Manhattan from Southampton at 3 p.m., but I'd have to get to the post office by 1:30 because they only accept passport applications there until that time on Wednesdays. Arrive late and it's Come Back Tomorrow.

First, however, I had to gather some of the things that I would need to make the application. I had my driver's license, a copy of my birth certificate, three forms I had gotten off the Internet that had to be filled out and a passport picture.

> If you haven't got an expired license you have to have a blood relative or close friend vouch for you.

I raced over. I wouldn't be back out East again for two days. I really felt that with Christmas slowing the mail, I had to get this application out that day. It was going to be close, as far as the 1:30 deadline went.

I parked in front of the post office at 1:20 p.m., grabbed my stuff and went inside. There was a long line, snaking right out the door. Inside there are four counters. One was empty. Post office employees were handling the needs of the populace in an orderly fashion at the other three.

I got on line, but I did wonder if I should go somewhere else to get done what I wanted. I briefly thought I'd shout out, "Is this where I stand to get a passport?" thus also establishing my presence before the deadline, but I didn't want people staring at me. So I stood quietly.

The line moved quickly. I thought about whether they should have had a fourth person out front and whether there were cutbacks with the postal service and so forth and so on and I occasionally glanced at the clock.

At 1:25, still with eight people in front of me, a man walked in from the street with a yellow slip and went to the fourth counter. A woman came out from the back to attend to him. I made my move. Obviously it would be after 1:30 if I stayed on line.

I leaned over the man's shoulder. "Is this where I get a passport?" I asked. The woman looked up. "Yes. I'll be done with this man in a

SHOPPING FOR A LOAN

In today's sophisticated marketplace it is not uncommon for a prospective buyer to shop around for a mortgage loan. The interest rate is usually their primary concern. The most sophisticated buyers know that to get the best deal on a mortgage you must consider the total package that the lender is offering. If there are high fees, a mortgage that offers a low interest rate may not be as ideal as it appears. When you look at the fees and the interest rate in the overall package, however, it could be an excellent deal.

One of the most difficult questions to answer is whether a fixed-rate loan would be better for you than an adjustable rate loan. One of the main considerations when making such a decision is the length of time that you plan to keep the property. We would like the opportunity to explain the other factors to you in detail.

BREAKING NEWS

On Tuesday, convicted murderer Daniel Pelosi was sentenced to 25-years-to-life by Supreme Court Justice Robert Doyle, for 2001's brutal bludgeoning of East Hampton millionaire Ted Ammon. The sentencing finally brings a close to the emotional and disturbing murder case which has captivated the Hamptons for the past couple years.

moment." The yellow slip said he had mail he had to sign for. I had made it.

With just two minutes to spare, she got to me. She was a small, cheerful, blonde woman. "I'll get someone from the back," she said. "I don't do passports. But you were here before 1:30, I saw you."

She walked back. Twenty seconds later I heard her tell someone. "He was here before 1:30," and shortly thereafter, a dark-haired woman came out, issued me a big bright smile, and asked to see all my documentation. At this point it was 1:35.

Honestly, I thought she might have been in a sour mood, considering the circumstances. She did tell me she would be going home around two, but I had the impression we would be done by that time. I was wrong.

In less than five minutes, she had found a flaw in my application.

"Your driver's license was renewed in August," she said. "There is a new rule that says drivers' licenses cannot be accepted if they are less than six months old. Do you have your EXPIRED driver's license?"

"I think I threw the expired license out."

"Well, I'm sorry you've fallen into this trap. It's all because of 9/11, this new rule. If you haven't got an expired license then you have to have a blood relative or close friend vouch for you. They have to bring in a form of identification and sign a separate document that they have known you more than ten years. Sorry." She folded up my application. Tried to hand it to me. I wouldn't take it.

Who did I know more than ten years? I looked around at the people on line in the post office. Nobody. But, I suspected, many of them knew ME because I've been editing this paper for forty years.

"Could they just know ME for more than ten years?" I asked.

"No. Intimate friend. Blood relative." Again she tried to hand me back my application. "Come back when you've got someone."

I made a small scene. I told her I had to get this application off TODAY. I said I had gotten there before 1:30, which I had. I said I could be right back with somebody I knew for more than ten years. (I had no idea who.)

She stared at me. "I'd vouch for him," the post office clerk at the next counter said. "I know who he is."

The dark haired woman glanced meaningfully at this clerk. It was nearing a quarter to two.

"Let me talk to the postmaster," she said to me in measured tones. Then she disappeared in into the back.

Whatever happened to the days when people worked a few minutes overtime? When there was no union? When post office workers got a tiny bonus for each piece of mail handled? Did they EVER get a tiny bonus for each piece of mail handled?

Shortly, a THIRD clerk came out, a black woman, small, all business, very courteous. "If you can get back here by two, we can do this," she said.

I was out the front door like a shot. Was there somebody within 300 yards who was an intimate friend? Not bloody likely. I surveyed the stores across the street. Laundromat. George Martin Restaurant. Sotheby's Real Estate. Corcoran Real Estate. I've known Barbara Corcoran for years. But she sold the business. Probably not there. Wait. There are probably ten Realtors in there. I bet at least ONE of them is someone I've known ten years.

Dodging traffic, I jaywalked across Nugent Street and went inside. To the right was a receptionist. Behind her, in two rows, eight desks on a side. There didn't appear to be anybody at any of them.

"Do I know you?" I asked.

"No."

"Have you lived here more than ten years?"

"I've lived here four years."

I motioned to all the desks, then turned back to the clerk. "Anybody here been here more than ten years?" I asked.

We Always Exceed Our Customers Expectations

A photo of the beach at Montauk was the cover of last year's swimsuit issue

The Swimsuit Issue

Feel Free Not To Look At This Picture. Just Turn The Page

By Dan Rattiner

The Sports Illustrated swimsuit issue is coming out in two weeks. This year there is a new twist. If you have a subscription to the magazine but DON'T WANT this issue, you can dial a telephone number and give the pretty girl who answers the phone on the other end your name. Then you don't get the issue. And she puts you on a list. Nutcase. She will also tell you you will be receiving an additional issue after your subscription ends to make up for not getting the swimsuit issue.

According to Sports Illustrated, this new feature is being offered because in the past they have had correspondence from readers who don't want that issue.

That people would want to go to the trouble to NOT get something they ordered is a puzzle to me. It's not like this is something new. They've been doing the swimsuit issue for twenty-six years. So almost all of the people who subscribe to Sports Illustrated knew when they first subscribed that the swimsuit issue is part of the deal.

The fact is that with any magazine there are some hits and there are some misses. You pays yer money and you takes yer choice as they say. So don't read it. Or don't look at it.

A person might also not want to read an issue with a lead feature on, for example, hockey. I know I wouldn't be interested in an issue dedicated to hockey. So I'd throw it out. Or just leave it around the house. Maybe somebody else coming over is interested in hockey. Maybe they'd stuff it in their bag on the way out. Okay with me. I'd make a new friend that way. Except, of course, if all they wanted to talk about was hockey.

So isn't this an issue about freedom of the press? Maybe not. But the real question is who, now, suddenly, doesn't want to receive the Sports Illustrated swimsuit issue?

Eunuchs.

I could understand that.

Feminists concerned with the possibility that, just maybe, this is a case of a magazine objectifying women. I could understand that.

Men who have recently married very scary, dominating wives who would go nuts with jealousy if they saw the swimsuit issue in the house, in their husband's briefcase or anywhere else they consider their bailiwick, and don't care WHAT used to be okay before they came on the scene.

People, now born again, who have skittered over to the right all of a sudden. Isn't this about one of the commandments? Not coveting thy neighbor's wife or something? They hold crossed index fingers in front of them while staring at the cover — a hex on you. Evil. Be gone.

People who think only about sports always like a break. They like beer. They like gorgeous women.

Rabid sports fans who live and breathe basketball, baseball, football, tennis, golf and hockey. But no, I have just changed my mind. People who think only about sports always like a break. They like beer. They like gorgeous women. I mean, at the games, you don't see these people throwing their coats over the cheerleaders. You might see them at a football game in ten degree weather naked from the waist up with a big red M on their bellies, but you don't see them throwing coats over the cheerleaders.

Maybe this is all about people who don't want to be cheated. Now THERE is a category. Accountants. Sensitive souls. People who all these years have been getting the swimsuit issue and not reading it because they don't want to — their right — and then have felt cheated because they only get 51 issues they can enjoy, not 52.

If you ask Sports Illustrated about it, however, what they tell you is that these people say they just don't want the swimsuit issue in the house because they have boys in the house they are raising, who are now 8 and 11, say, who might be confused by seeing busty girls in bathing suits.

This is crap.

First of all, boys 8 to 11 watch cable TV, go to movies and have known all about everything since they were six. Second, assuming that the parents actually believe their pre-pubescent sons still think it's all about a stork, they can a. just dump the magazine in the trash with the other junk mail, or, b. keep it in the bedroom in a bottom dresser drawer with the prophylactics and the unloaded revolver with the safety catch on and then read it after the kiddies go to bed.

What I think the true answer is, is a drift to conservatism in our attitude about sex. Practically everyone who is a subscriber has had no problem with this harmless break from the sports action in the past, having kept the swimsuit issue on the coffee table and Hustler in the dresser drawer. Now Hustler is out of the question and the swimsuit issue belongs in the dresser. And that is ridiculous. So please don't send it to me so I don't have to do this ridiculousness.

A possible OTHER answer to all of this, is that with the drift to conservatism in our attitude about sex, manly men who want no part of this drift but don't want to make a scene, go along with telling Sports Illustrated NOT to send them the issue, and then go down to a newsstand, buy one anyway, stand in the shadows, look carefully through it while trying to savor and memorize the pictures of each of the luscious babes, then tuck the magazine in their coats, walk to the corner and drop it in the trash basket.

Hey, in the summertime, we can all go to the beach. But don't look! Don't look! •

The Floating Liquid Gas Transfer Station Off Wading River

By Dan Rattiner

You know there is a saying that goes there is a place for everything and everything has its place? Often things that seem totally out of place come to the attention of this newspaper, and we help try to do something about it. Usually, the thing there is no place for goes away.

Eastern Long Island is one of the most beautiful spots in the country. It has beaches, wineries, farms, harbors, dunes and old New England villages with town ponds and village greens. To give you an example of something that was the wrong place and the wrong time, consider an attempt two years ago to hold a two day rock concert on the East End, in a field where maybe a quarter million people would have a great time, drink beer and trash the place. Never happened.

Now comes word that a Houston, Texas gas and oil firm called Broadwater has looked at a map of the New York Metropolitan Area, noted that there is a shortage of natural gas facilities here, closed their eyes and dropped a finger onto the map. On a spot that is just nine miles off the coast of Wading River, they are proposing to build an offshore natural gas rig twice the size of an aircraft carrier. It would be highly flammable, god-awful ugly and in plain sight of people on the beach or anyone out fishing or sailing. Freighters would tie up at this terminal, offload bottles of low temperature liquid gas containers which have been transported at 212 degrees below zero, and, on the terminal, this liquid gas would be heated up so it expands into an amount of natural gas ten times the volume it was when shipped as liquid. The natural gas would then be fed through an underwater pipe into the already built Iroquois pipeline that crosses Long Island Sound thirty miles to the west from Northport, Long Island to Milford, Connecticut. About a billion pounds of natural gas a day would be processed in this manner.

The project, if approved, will be on line by 2010 and experts say that if there was to be an explosion at this facility, it is far enough offshore so that nobody in Wading River would be killed.

There is also a phrase which goes "Not in My

CABLEVISION SELLS ITS TELEVISION SATELLITE

By Dan Rattiner

Cablevision, which has a monopoly on the television cable service here on Long Island, has lost in its attempt to go out and play with the big boys. Two years ago, against the advice of practically everybody on Wall Street, Cablevision ordered a TV satellite launched in the hopes of becoming a competitor with the national satellite TV services, DISH Network and DIRECTV. Each of those mammoth companies has several satellites circling the globe. Cablevision's satellite went up a year and a half ago, and the plan was for it to be the first of many. Then, there would be three big players in the national satellite TV business.

It was not to be, because the plan was very flawed. For one thing, the Cablevision satellite service, which they dubbed Voom, could only cover part of the country. It also required that every subscriber buy a special box. Had Cablevision followed up the first satellite with several more right away they might have had a chance, but they couldn't afford that. They could do one, and then wait and see.

What Cablevision soon found was that Voom was unable to persuade the major cable networks to sign up their services. Cablevision had made the colossal misjudgment that DIRECTV and DISH would simply lie down and let Cablevision in as a new competitor. Instead, DISH and DIRECTV offered their own incentives to the networks to keep them from signing with Cablevision.

After they found that out, Cablevision changed course and announced that Voom would deliver only high definition channels. It would be a boutique satellite. But most people don't yet have the equipment to receive and display high definition and they may not have it anytime soon. In the end, Voom could offer only 32 channels. And of the many millions of viewers who might have signed up for Voom, only 28,000 did.

It has all ended in humiliation, as Cablevision has had to sell their satellite dish to DISH, one of the big boys, for $200 million in cash. Cablevision cut its losses. And in doing so, their stock rose. Without the burden of Voom, the stock went from $24.30 to $25.40 on the announcement.

Cablevision has never been a favorite of this newspaper. Over the years they have done their customers wrong time and time again, but because of the monopoly they have, they have not had to worry about any of it. Now, they find themselves a company operating on a much larger stage, and the larger companies are doing to them what they used to do to us. And because of the Voom failure, they remain a little fish in a big pond, just one of those that might get gobbled up.

The agreement by the board of Directors of Cablevision to sell the satellite was made after a very bitter fight, according to observers. Charles Dolan, who founded the company when he was in his forties is now 78, and as Chairman of the Board, wanted to keep up the fight for the satellite business. His son, James L. Dolan, 49, the President of the company, wanted to sell. And toward the end, the father and son had stopped speaking to one another. The Board of Directors went with the son, and so the satellite was sold. •

Back Yard." And it is also true that if we are going to use electricity we have to get the stuff to make the electricity. But there is also zoning, which has always been decided upon by local villages and towns. And you don't put a hog slaughterhouse next to a church.

The trouble is that villages and towns have no say about zoning in Long Island Sound. What goes on in the Sound is decided upon by federal and state officials. In other words, they can put this thing here whether we like it or not.

It seems unless we do something to bring the inappropriateness of this to the attention of federal and state officials in a big way, we are going to get a highly flammable gas transfer facility twice as big as an aircraft carrier nine miles off Wading River. •

Gardiner Gone

A String Of Auctions At Christie's Are Selling Some East End Heritage

By Debbie Tuma

Last August, 93 year-old Robert David Lion Gardiner died, and as the last direct heir to the 350-year Gardiner legacy, he left no one behind to inherit his fortune.Thus ends the entire 13 generation dynasty of Gardiners in East Hampton. R.D.L. Gardiner was the last of the direct line of Gardiners with the family name to own, among other things, Gardiner's Island, and all the family heirlooms.

Now, the entire contents of his seven-acre East Hampton estate are being auctioned off at Christie's Auction House in Manhattan, pieces of the Gardiner heritage are being scattered to the four winds, and eager bidders are flocking to buy furniture, portraits and documents from this great historic family. Gardiner's widow, Eunice Bailey Oakes Gardiner of Florida, has turned the entire estate over to Christie's, which started their auction last Thursday and Friday.

This auction has created such a high level of interest and excitement that even Christie's employees were surprised by both the large turnout and the high prices these family heirlooms were fetching. Many of the bidders rushed in from the East End, where local groups are eager to obtain collectibles and documents that will preserve the history of this area.

"It has been non-stop bidding, and we couldn't have anticipated what a keen interest people have in this family and its heritage," said Katie Adler, a spokeswoman for Christies.

Adler said, "The silver, furniture and paintings are bringing in top dollar."

"Many people, especially from the East End of Long Island, want to own a piece of this prominent estate."

The entire contents of Gardiner's Main Street, East Hampton residence began selling in a flurry of activity, during their "Important American Furniture, Folk Art, Silver and Prints" auction. Adler explained that certain American pieces from the Gardiner estate, which fit into the theme of this auction, had been auctioned off for an hour or two each day, as part of the overall auction.

"About 500 people packed the room, and bids were being taken both in-person and by telephone," she explained. Among the bidders were Long Island groups including the East Hampton Public Library, the East Hampton Historical Society and the Southampton Historical Museum.

Tom Twomey, President of the East Hampton Public Library, and former East Hampton Town Historian, said his group was thrilled to have bid on and gotten the only document sold last week, which had research value to the Town of East Hampton. This was an 18th century map of Gardiner's Island to Montauk Point, for $6,600. Twomey, who attended the auction along with Bruce Collins, co-chair of the Long Island Collection Committee at the library, and also Tara D'Amato, said, "We're very excited about this map, and we'd like to get more documents from the Gardiner estate, which will be auctioned in the next round on March 1 and 2 at Christie's." He said about five other people bid on the map at last week's auction, but "we kept holding our ground and we were successful bidders."

Twomey said this 16 by 29-inch map is called a "chart of Gardiner's Island, from the Atlantic Neptune ship, dated 1779." Twomey said his group talked to Dean Fairley, Vice-President of the American Division at Christie's, who said he would notify them of other documents as they go through the estate. "Our East Hampton Library has one of the largest collections of historical documents, with over 3,500 wills, letters, diaries, whaling logs, business journals, and minutes of organizations, in over five rooms," he said.

Also attending the auction was Marilyn Rittenour, Director of the East Hampton Historical Society, who had an interest in a clock made in Maidstone, England, which sold for around $30,000. Some of East Hampton's oldest families sailed here from there.

Richard Barons, Director of the Southampton Historical Museum, bid on one of the Pelletreau silver pieces by telephone.

Sherrill Foster of East Hampton was among a number of locals who went in last Tuesday night to a preview/reception at Christie's. Others included Frank Neubold of the East Hampton Historical Society, Richard Martin, Director of the Suffolk County Department of Parks, Recreation and Historical Preservation, Maria Brennan of the LVIS, and Bob MacKay, Director of the Society For the Preservation of Long Island Antiquities, who ran the reception.

The Gardiner family brass mounted oak lift-top travelling bottle case, British, 18th c.

"Being interested in East Hampton's history, I wanted to attend this reception to see these heirlooms and I found it very exciting to see them in person," she said.

Hugh King, East Hampton's Town Crier, and also its Village Historian, said although he could not make it to New York, he was happy to hear that East End groups participated. "The high prices these heirlooms and documents got is indicative of how much the Gardiner family has an allure and keen interest among collectors," he said.

Adler said, "Last Thursday afternoon, we sold three pieces of silver from the Gardiner collection, and on Friday, we sold a total of 25 assorted pieces of furniture, portraits and household items. The silver, furniture and paintings are bringing in top dollar.

"This sale is also continuing in the spring, with more of the contents of the Gardiner home being auctioned off on March 1 and 2, during our monthly 'House Sale."

She said these items were estimated at prices ranging from several hundred dollars to around $30,000. Adler also said at this time, as the house continues to be unpacked, more documents may be auctioned. So far, the only document auctioned off was the map of Gardiner's Island.

Also on Thursday, Christie's sold a silver tankard by Elias Pelletreau, a silversmith of Southampton, dating back to 1791, which was estimated at $30,000-$50,000, and which sold for an amazing $156,000. Adler said that although she cannot release the names of any of the buyers, she could only say that this piece was purchased by "a New York dealer, a member of the trade."

A silver soup ladle, also by Pelletreau, circa 1782, was estimated at a value of $3,000 to $5,000, and sold for $38,400. This was bought by "a private individual from Long Island," according to Adler. The third piece of silver sold last Thursday was a sugar bowl by John Pelletreau (Elias' son) circa 1820. It was esti-

The late George Plimpton at the Artist-Writers Game

Paris Review

Is There Another George Plimpton Out There Somewhere?

By Sarah Gross

The venerable Paris Review, run by the late bon vivant George Plimpton, who had a house out here, is either metamorphosing into adulthood, or having a nervous breakdown, depending on who you ask. Last week, the Board of Directors announced it was looking for a new editor for the second time in two years. Former intern Brigid Hughes took over the top job after the 2003 death of George Plimpton, the magazine's co-founder and its sole editor during a spectacular 50-year history.

A search committee of "highly qualified intellectuals" will convene to elect the new editor, according to James Goodale, Board Secretary, who spoke to me from his law office. Goodale disputed reports that the Board was discontented with Hughes' style: "She cranked out issues and did a great job. But we'd be fools if we didn't take a long, hard look at things now."

The search committee will be headed by Bob Silvers, editor of the New York Review of Books. Other members are Thomas Guinzburg, current Board President and former editor of Viking Press; Dru Heinz, a longtime literary benefactor; Terry McDonell, editor of Sports Illustrated, and Peter Matthiessen, author and one of the Review's founding editors.

> Another question of keen interest is whether the publication will finally move into new, grown-up offices

Despite rumors that the Foundation that oversees the publication wants a more active role in choosing the magazine's content, Goodale insists that they will take into account the ideas of any new editor. But the notion that someone might come in and change the very nature of the Review is one he rejects adamantly. When asked if a new name might be appropriate for a new-style journal, Goodale responded sharply, "Are you kidding? It will not change. It may be rethought, but the purpose of the Foundation is to protect the character and retain the name."

Under Hughes' leadership, the Review has already changed focus slightly. There will be two non-fiction pieces published in the spring issue, her last as editor. And there was an excerpt of a graphic novel by Renee French published in the fall issue.

Those currently working at the Review's offices are a little less sanguine about whether it can withstand the winds of change unscathed. Oliver Broudy, a senior editor, would say only that "so much is up in the air right now." And one of the current interns, who would not give his name, confirmed 'things are a little touchy around here." As to whether he would consider throwing his hat in the ring and applying for the vacancy in an attempt to recapitulate Hughes' meteoric rise from intern to editor, the intern would say only, "I don't know if I'd try to jump that far ahead in my career in one step."

Another question of keen interest is whether the publication will finally move into new, grown-up offices leaving its revered setting in Plimpton's upper east side townhouse. In his will, he said he hoped they would remain. According to Goodale, it is merely a matter of logistics: "We need seats. Right now we have to stand up all day!" Pressed further however, he admitted new offices might "create the appearance that we're serious." The Board's editor Thomas Guinzburg has been quoted as saying the Review needed more subscribers and a more businesslike approach.

Whether this is what the magazine truly needs is another question entirely. Some, like author Joyce Carol Oates, who has published many stories in the Paris Review, feel that a post Plimpton journal is an anathema altogether. "Things wear out," she said from her home in New Jersey. "Maybe it should be discontinued. Everything comes to an end."

But acclaimed author and local resident Budd Schulberg, who had ample experience as a writer with the Review, is more sympathetic about the tribulations of any new editor. "I don't think it's quite fair what's been done. [Plimpton] had stamped his personality on it so strongly, so from the outside, it's a little unfair. Anyone who followed had a terrible burden on them to continue in the style that George had." Schulberg was nonetheless wistful about his experiences with Plimpton. "He had very good taste and he was also very catholic with a small c, open to all styles. He was an excellent editor."

Alex Sapirstein, who interned there for six months in 1987, remembers her sampling of the Plimpton era fondly. "I wouldn't say George ruled, it was more like presided and infused. It was very much his baby but there was nothing controlling or authoritarian about him.

...he was obviously completely devoted and involved but I think it is his energy, vision commitment and largesse (personal more than financial) that will be missed more than [his] hands-on input. As long as he was alive, the spirit in which [the Review] was founded was maintained — it did have a very consistent voice, identity, mission. He certainly protected it — cocooned in his home, reasonably safe from market forces etc. [It] sounds like they are having trouble replacing him with one person and a composite could be a nightmare. I guess no one could have wrenched it in a new direction while he was alive and it sounds like open season now."

Shulberg has his own view about the ideal candidate for the job. "I feel it should be someone who combines some sensitivity to what George was doing.... but someone else has to stamp their creative process on it."

As to whether the search committee needs to be unanimous about the new choice of editor, Goodale belied the truly idiosyncratic nature of the magazine in perfect form: "I don't know really; we're not General Motors."

"You might try Gay," she said. "Down at the end on the left. She's been out here a long time."

I glanced at my watch. 1:50 p.m. Then I raced down the aisle. And there was a woman whose nameplate said GAY WASSERMAN. I looked right at her and tried desperately to see that I had lucked out, that we knew one another. Nope.

"Hi," I said, smiling smartly.

I explained the situation. We had to be longtime friends. Best friends. She seemed dubious at first. She had paperwork to do.

"I have to fax this over right away," she said.

But I continued on and won her over. She began to get into the spirit of the thing.

"I guess I could get the receptionist to fax this," she said. "Also, we DO know each other, sort of."

I perked up.

"Remember Martha? She worked at Lotte Burke fitness in Bridgehampton one summer. You dated her."

I remembered Martha. She was quite beautiful. "That was fifteen years ago. But how could you possibly know that?"

"She's my sister's niece. She stayed at my house in Sagaponack that summer."

By this time, we were walking across the street. It was 1:55. Time for some fast coaching.

"Now remember. Best friends. You came over at Thanksgiving. We've known each other for years and years. Twenty years."

For a moment, I thought she might turn back, but then she bucked up and we were in the door.

At the counter, all went well. She filled out the supporting documents. Signed the voucher. We chatted, she and I, about this and that, very friendly-like.

The postmaster passed by. Without even pausing as he went, he said, "Dan, I expect that next year we will be the "Best of the Best" post office."

"You will be," I shouted after him.

As Gay and I finished up, and she asked the clerk if she could go, it occurred to me that I was going to kiss her goodbye. And so I did. On the cheek, as you would a best friend.

"So good to see you," I said.

And so she left.

When the clerk and I finished up, I went out the front door into the bright sunlight and noted I still had plenty of time to get to the Jitney. I looked at the Corcoran sign. And decided there was enough time to go to a florist shop and arrange to send Gay Wasserman flowers.

I wonder what ever happened to Martha?

And I wonder if either Gay or I could go to jail for this?

How Big Is Too Big?

Three Week Surfing Camp At Ditch Plains Pushes The Envelope

By Kelly Krieger

Montauk is known as "The End." And geographically, Montauk is the end of Long Island when looking at it from points west. But when you live in this quaint town year-round it represents much more, particularly to surfers. For years, surfers have gravitated to Montauk because it is one of the best surf spots on Long Island.

Historically, there have been a number of surfing competitions and annual events at Ditch Plains and since they just involve people surfing in the ocean, which is free, none of the local authorities have much minded. But an upcoming event sponsored by Quiksilver for the summer of 2005 has stirred up concern from some locals. Quiksilver, a nationally successful surf-gear and surf instruction company, is planning to host a three-week surf camp at Ditch Plains this July and August. In the past, Quiksilver has successfully sponsored a daylong event that incorporated a brief surfing instructional for local students.

I attended last year's well-organized event, and I was impressed with the turnout. Professional surfers gave instruction and insight into the world of professional surfing. Ages of the participants ranged from elementary to high school. It was a day filled with excitement and eagerness to learn or improve on surfing skills and techniques.

Unfortunately, the waves were not that big, but it was entertaining to watch students ride even the smallest waves while applying what they had just learned. As with any public event, there were rules to abide by.

Montauk falls under the jurisdiction of East Hampton Town laws. Any event held in Montauk must meet the requirements governed under East Hampton Town regulations set into place by the Town Board of Trustees.

> The town of East Hampton is required to take certain precautions to insure that any public event... is safe and secure.

This summer, the proposed Quiksilver surf camp will offer daily instruction during a three-week period for up to forty students. However, some locals are concerned that this level of activity will infringe on the availability of parking, overcrowd the public facilities, and interfere with their enjoyment of the beach. Presently there are no restrictions in place, but residents are concerned that their beach will be taken over.

In the past, there have been many sport lessons taught at local beaches, but not of this magnitude. Previously, there have been issues at both Beach Lane in Wainscott and Lazy Point in Amagansett where local instructors taught windsurfing and other sporting activities. Residents complained that they used too much parking and hindered normal use of the beach. Suggestions have been made that class lessons within a reasonable size (up to five students) will not need a special permit, but anything larger such as the proposed Quiksilver Surf Camp must apply for a special permit.

The town of East Hampton is required to take certain precautions to insure that any public event, whether it be a street fair, annual festival or, in this case, a camp, is safe and secure. The town already has a "mass-gathering" regulation in place that requires a permit for a party or gathering of fifty or more. This includes even events at private homes. However, the Quiksilver event is considered commercial and will require a different kind of permit that will need to be outlined by the Board of Trustees.

Quiksilver believes that parking will not be an issue as they have a bus that will drop the students off at the beach at the beginning of the lesson and pick them up after it is over.

Councilman Job Potter supports the event saying, "This is a great idea and we will be working closely with the town to create an appropriate permit that will cover all bases. We're not looking to stop any fun, we only want to make sure safety precautions are made," he said.

While many participating students may be from the local area, there is also a draw for out-of-town visitors as well. This can only be good for business, and good for Montauk. Councilman Potter said that the Town Board will meet again in early February to discuss what the next plan of action will be. Although this is all very preliminary, it appears that everyone is working together to make it a successful event for all.

mated at $2,000-$3,000, and sold for $38,400, to the same person from Long Island.

"That's the beauty of auctions — when there is a lot of interest, the price just keeps going up, and in the case of the Gardiner heirlooms, it has been very successful," explained Adler.

She said that last Friday, a total of 25 pieces (Lots 250-275) "all sold very well" and pulled in hundreds of thousands of dollars. The top seller was the Gardiner family Chippendale mahogany Bonnet-top chest-on-chest, circa 1772, which was estimated at between $500,000 to $800,000, and sold for $856,000. Adler explained that this was because it was labeled by Thomas Townsend, a noted cabinet maker from Newport, Rhode Island, and it was the only piece of furniture labeled by him.

The top-selling portrait was a pair by Daniel Huntington, dated 1898, of Gardiner's relatives, Mr. and Mrs. David Thompson. Mrs. Thompson was the former Sarah Diodati Gardiner, and this pair of portraits had an estimated value of $2,000-$4,000, and sold for $62,400.

Other portraits by Daniel Huntington, whom the Gardiner family commissioned to paint them, included one of Mrs. John Lion Gardiner, estimated at $3,000-$5,000, which sold for $45,600, and one of John Lion Gardiner, who was the 7th proprietor of the island following the death of his father David in 1774, which sold for the same amount.

Adler said a few more of Gardiner's old master paintings will be sold during Christie's 'Old Masters Sale" on January 26th.

Other highlights of last Friday's auction were the Gardiner family wool on cotton needlework bed-hanging panel, by Mary Maria Gardiner, circa 1798, estimated at $1,500-$2,000, and which sold for $38,400. There was also a Gardiner family brass-mounted oak lift-top traveling bottle case, with six glass bottles, which was 18th century British, and estimated at $700-$900, which sold for a whopping $14,400.

The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

Sheltered Islander #333
Honorable "Mensch"ion....Mr. Cori Cass

From The Shelter Island Reporter, by Nicholas Morehead. "...In a novel example of using vice to extend virtue, [Islander] Cori Cass is organizing a poker tournament. The proceeds will go to the International Red Cross Disaster Relief Fund. The tournament is scheduled for February 5.... Entrants must front a "buy-in" of $150 which gets them a stack of chips. ...To make sure the tournament is run correctly, he's bringing in a little professional help.. the Coram-based New York Poker Tour...[they] provide the dealers, cards, chips, tables and a tournament "manager" to make sure everything goes swimmingly. ... People can even register for the upcoming tournament online at the company's Web site www.nypokertour.com. ... just look on the left side of the Web site where there are a series of chips. Click on the "events" chip and scroll down to find the February 5 tsunami relief tournament. ... Mr. Cass ...encouraged anyone interested in donating food or beverages to contact him. He added that he is donating his time organizing and promoting the event and will not take a fee of any kind."

I spoke with Cori and he already has 50 players booked! For more information call him at 749-0987 or 516-361-4399.

He also has some other gaming events planned for that night as well....

Biggest Fish Lying Game — This is a popular island game generally played at a dock. The entrance fee is $10. The entrant stands before three judges with their biggest and best fish story. You can buy a Bible to swear on at the door for an additional $5, a stack of Bibles will cost you $25 and if you really want to win this contest, you can buy the station wagon full of nuns for $1500.

Strip Poker — There are three venues of play: Ages 21 to 31 is played in the main lobby. Ages 32 to 42 is played in a dimly lit back room. Ages 43 to 92 is played in the dark basement.

Clam Races —A very popular island sport. Clam racing takes place on a converted shuffle board with a layer of sand covered by four inches of water. The water must be kept at the regulation four inches so that the judges can insure no cheating is taking place. Any cheaters will be steamed and eaten on the spot. The entrants are lined up at the starting line and are aimed in the direction of the finish line, which is six inches away. I know that doesn't sound very far to you and me, but to a clam it's nearly half a foot, which is quite a distance to travel when your only means of propulsion is squirting water out of the end of your digestive tubing. For an entrance fee of $15, bring your fastest clam and race him against island favorites, like Silt Face, who won the Southampton Clam Classic in 2001, crossing the finish line in just under four hours; William Shell, who gave Pacemaker a valve-stopping squirt for the money in the last race at The Dory; and the newcomer sponsored by The Dory, Seaclams 7, who will also be there.

Biggest Buck Tournament — The person who brings in the biggest deer hit that day wins the Biggest Buck Tournament. It's $20 to enter your deer. Mr. Cass even has a squad of men set up to pull Bambi off of your car grill for you. So rev up your truck, Minivan or Golf Cart and hit those blind curves, baby!

Cat Pipes Contest — A little known sport brought here by those of Scottish heritage on Shelter Island, Cat Piping is how bag pipes began. Scots would grab a cat by the tail and throw it over their shoulder and squeeze it until it hit the desired pitch. Over the years, Scots chickened out because of the clawing and now use lambs' bladders as a substitute for cats. However, on the Island, the tradition is preserved. So bring your fat cat and give it a try even just for fun. The first cat piper to play Handel's "Messiah" wins!

McDonalds McFerry McRace — Starting at 5 p.m., you drive the 45 minutes to the closest McDonalds, buy two of everything on the menu, including only two French fries and bring it all back to the starting line without eating anything! It's never been done. Every one on Island knows you have to get extra fries to eat in the car so you don't have a Big Mac attack, and if the ferry guys get a whiff of a cheeseburger — and they all have cheeseburger radar — they pull the old, "No cash tonight, this is Cheeseburger Wednesday" routine. You have to pay in cheeseburgers or stay and clean the ferry...

Good Luck Everyone!

The New Philanthropy

From Orient To Nicaragua: How One Man Made An Unusual Journey, And A Big Difference

By Roy Bradbrook

Why would the CEO of a major financial corporation headquartered on Long Island spend eight of his valuable days building a primitive cinderblock house in the depths of Nicaragua? That is the question I posed to Angelo Mangia, summer resident of Orient and president and CEO of Standard Funding Corporation.

Mangia is an attorney by profession who previously served as chief counsel of the New York State Senate and held senior positions in the investment banking sector. He explained that about a year ago, at a business meeting in Boston, an acquaintance told him of a trip he had recently made to Nicaragua, building homes under the auspices of "Bridges to Community," a Westchester-based non-profit community development organization whose objectives include taking groups of volunteers to developing countries to work, learn and reflect. The time there is designed to promote better understanding of different cultures, coupled with a commitment to improve the lives of local communities by carrying out projects involving construction, health and the environment.

"Like many, I had always given financially to charities and had worked for some years in the public sector in Albany, but after I saw a video of this group of Westchester business leaders and found out that they were in the process of putting together the second group, I just knew that I had to make the trip," said Mangia. "I went last November, and some of my family and friends wondered about what I was doing, but to me the opportunity to actually be involved in the practical aspect of giving was very important."

Angelo Mangia in Nicaragua with his team and local family members

> "Any of us can write checks... but to be in one of these villages and experience the poverty level creates a real level of commitment. This was an empowering experience."

The group of fourteen was split in two, each with the goal of building one house. The time spent in Nicaragua is very intense and there are very intensive physical aspects in digging foundations, mixing cement and moving cinder blocks. But in the two villages where the houses are being built there are local masons who guide the unskilled volunteers in their efforts. The houses are very simple structures by our standards. The cinder block structure is strengthened with steel reinforcing bars, has a sheet metal roof and the total area is just about 15-foot square. This one room has a tile floor and a window and can be partitioned by the occupants to make sleeping areas. They have no electricity, running water or toilet facilities, although running water is available in the village and there are various means (legal or otherwise!) of tapping into an electricity supply.

"Any of us can write checks," said Mangia. "Not that there is anything wrong in this, but to be in one of these villages and to see and experience the poverty level creates a real level of commitment. This was an empowering experience to be part of a small group and spend time in a place like this, to interact with the community and to see just what has been accomplished. It rekindled feelings I had as a younger man of desiring to do good work. We all get caught up in our business activities and the opportunity to participate in a program like this is very special."

Bridges to Community has been in existence since 1992 and, apart from Nicaragua, they also operate teams in Kenya and Nepal. The teams that go out are very varied. They can be groups of senior business leaders, such as Mangia's team, or from churches, universities or just individuals who apply to take part. Ages of participants range from the young to the elderly. The US Naval Academy has a couple of teams going out this year. There is a detailed briefing system to ensure that would-be participants are fully aware of what they can expect to find during their stay. Because the organization is non-profit, team members have to pay for their airfare and also a fee toward the expenses of operation. The fourteen members of the team Mangia went with decided to make an additional donation of $2500 per person to cover the material cost of fourteen homes.

Even though living conditions are primitive, the food simple and the work strenuous, especially for sedentary executives, Mangia had no hesitation when I asked if this was a once and for all trip for him.

"While I would love to see the operations in other parts of the world, my visit to Nicaragua left me wanting to see how things progress there, and I have already committed to revisiting this fall. While we were there a young child died of dehydration. This is something we are not used to here. Constantly we were reminded of the basic needs of food, shelter and physical health that just were not available to these people. Going there takes you out of your comfort zone and, for anyone who has compassion and is looking for personal growth and a real challenge, I would encourage them to consider being part of Bridges to Community. When I returned I felt very emotional and very thankful. I dearly would love to get a group of Long Island business leaders to form a team. Apart from the work individuals do there, the projects are funds-driven so the more money that comes in the more local people can carry on building houses even when the teams are not there."

Massive disasters such as the Asian tsunami, earthquakes and 9/11 naturally are always front-page stories, and rightly so. But the smaller scale, ongoing work of organizations such as Bridges to Community and the dedication of individuals such as Angelo Mangia to improving the lot of those whose lives from beginning to end lack basic human needs for survival, should never be forgotten. They should be constantly applauded and supported.

Inspired Winemaking at Waters Crest

Jim Waters of Waters Crest Winery in Cutchogue has a great story to tell, one that will touch your heart as well as your palate.

Home winemakers turning pro aren't particularly rare in the wine world, but the inspiration for Waters' conversion sets him apart. For years, he worked for trucking and freight carrier companies. Wine was his passion, but not his profession.

That all changed after the September 11 tragedy three years ago.

A volunteer fireman and fire commissioner, Waters found himself at Ground Zero shortly after the attacks. Working side-by-side with other rescue workers had a sudden and profound effect on his outlook on life. Not long after, he decided to make a change. It was time to make his passion his profession.

Waters' production runs are small (he made only 50 cases of his sold-out Meritage) but every last bottle takes "hand-crafted" to a whole new level.

"I can honestly say that I've touched every single bottle of wine I make," he said as we chatted over tastes of his current Merlot, Riesling and Chardonnay (and a barrel sample of his Cabernet Franc).

Charming and engaging, Waters spent about an hour talking about his wines, his story and the Long Island wine region in general. It only took about five minutes for me to see how happy he was to be dealing with grapes and barrels as opposed to trucks. He is just teeming with enthusiasm for wine and winemaking.

Waters Crest's 2003 Chardonnay ($16) is a great wine to pair with lighter foods. Bright acidity and nice citrus notes are well framed with toasty vanilla and barely perceptible oak. It's not overly complex, but well-made and delightful.

The Waters Crest 2002 Merlot ($17) offers nice cherry fruit and subtle hints of chocolate. Soft, well-incorporated tannins make it extremely approachable. It benefits from some "air time" but another year or so in the bottle would be even better.

Far and away the best of its current releases, the Waters Crest Riesling ($17) gets my vote for the best new Riesling. Absolutely mouth-watering and unfailingly Alsatian in style, it is filled with lime and melon flavors with terrific acidity. Get some of this before it's sold out. I don't think there's a better dry Riesling on the Island.

Starting February 1, the Long Island Wine Council is offering a great Winter Wine Month Passport promotion. For $25 (or $40 per couple) you'll receive a passport that entitles you to special discounts and promotions at Long Island's finest wineries, restaurants, B&Bs and attractions. Most of the wineries involved are waiving their tasting fees, offering at least 10 percent off of all wine purchases (with savings up to 20 percent, depending on the number of bottles you buy) and offering food/chocolate pairings. A few wineries are even offering special tastings of library or limited-release wines.

I plan to take part and enjoy all the East End has to offer... even in the dead of winter.

For a complete list of participating vendors and to order your passport, visit www.liwines.com.

Winter Impressions Of The North Fork

A Photography Exhibit At The Greenporter Hotel

See the North Fork in winter through the eyes of a Manhattan transplant from Newport Beach, California Photographer Christina Minna, who has worked in the media for over 20 years as a musician, entertainer and musical consultant for film, took these 34 photographs during the Long Island blizzard of 2003 in Greenport and Orient where she spent hours trudging through areas that were off limits to the most experienced snow drifters in order to capture the timeless landscape of nature. These frozen moments represent the serene beauty that is sometimes forgotten in a cold, harsh world.

Christina has traveled extensively around the world capturing pictures of nature, but as a result of coming from the arid coast of southern California, she has always been drawn to winter landscapes. "Winter Impressions" will be on display through February 20 in the lobby of The Greenporter Hotel and Spa at 326 Front Street. Photos, which are color, 8x10 inch matted pieces, are for sale for $95 each. Call 477-0066.

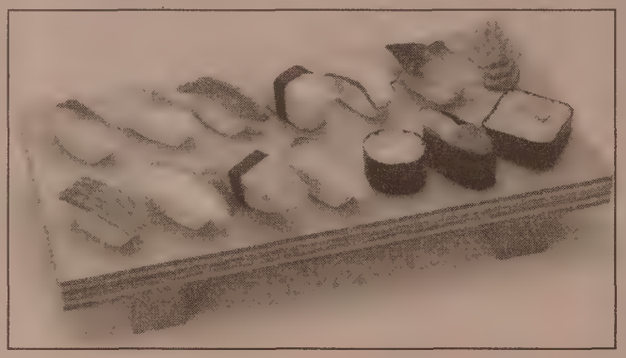
Away At School... By David Lion Rattiner

Payment Plan

One of the things that you are obligated to do when you have a girlfriend, or a boyfriend for that matter, is go out to eat with them at a restaurant. Although this may sound like a natural activity for couples to do, I personally have not found the going out to eat at a restaurant activity to be a time of relaxation and fun conversation, but a time of psychological warfare and mild depression. Let me explain to you what I mean.

First off, let me explain to you that my girlfriend, Jen, makes an obscene amount of money working as a waitress in a fancy Boston restaurant and goes to grad school on full scholarship. I, on the other hand, well, let's just say that I go to college and don't have a scholarship or work at a fancy restaurant. And so, it is now a Friday night, and my girlfriend is just getting home from school and asks the question, "Do you want to go out for dinner tonight?" The psychological battle has begun.



The first thing that runs through my head when she asks this question is, how can I pay as little money as humanly possible for Jen and me to go out to dinner without looking like a cheap loser? I start thinking about scenarios in my head where dinner could be less than ten dollars but still be romantic. Pasta runs through my head. I could buy pasta and sauce for five bucks and then buy a bottle of wine for five bucks. Then I could cook it and we could eat at home. The pasta is romantic, the wine is romantic, maybe I'll even light some candles. I run this by her. "I was thinking that maybe we could eat in tonight. I was going to cook some pasta and buy us a bottle of wine."

How could she turn down this offer? It was so perfect. The wine is the real kicker. There was no way she wasn't going to want to do this. She looks at me and replies, "I really don't want to eat pasta tonight because of all the carbohydrates. I want to eat something healthy."

Damn the Atkins guy, damn him to hell! I thought to myself. That guy really ruined it for everybody, didn't he? My girlfriend is awaiting my response as I sit there, lost in thought. She is thinking to herself, c'mon Dave, I know you can afford the sixty bucks it is going to cost to go out to eat tonight. Just give in. But I refuse to give in. I can make that sixty bucks go a long way this week. Sixty bucks could be a week's worth of food if I really want to stretch it.

"Okay, Jen, we can go out to eat. Where do you want to go?" HA HA! The ball is in her court now! I know that she won't say the place that she really wants to go because she knows that I won't want to pay for something that expensive. She also probably thinks that if she mentions the expensive place then she'll look like she is one of those girls that only dates guys because they take them out to those expensive places.

My girlfriend looks at me with a smile, as if she knows this game too well. "I don't care, Dave. Where do you want to go?"

Touché.

The ball is back in my court now. If I say a cheap place now, I most certainly will look cheap. If I say an expensive place, I'll reluctantly pay the bill and hate the entire experience. Especially now that I am twenty-two, a drink alone could cost ten bucks at a fancy place. What do I do? Do I just give in and let her win? I can't do that. If I just give in, then I'll have to pay money I don't want to spend. Why am I so cheap? What is wrong with me? Well, that's it, I'm mentioning sushi. I'm going to pay fifty bucks for raw fish and rice wine and that is going to be that. There is no way she can tell me that sushi isn't healthy, either. I'm a man and I can't look like a wuss and not pay. I know this is the twenty first century, I know that Jen probably will make four hundred dollars in cash this weekend, but I don't care. I'm going to say sushi and pay and shut up about the whole thing.

I look over at my girlfriend, and, using every bit of acting experience I learned while doing the school plays in grade school, I say, "I would like to have sushi with you, honey. Does that sound good to you?"

Of course it is going to sound good to her. She just won the battle of wits and now I'm going into my state of mild, restaurant spending induced depression. She is going to be all over this "request" of mine to go and get sushi.

"Yeah, sushi sounds good." So innocent, "But you have to let me pay half because it is expensive and I feel bad."

This must be a trick, pay half. She can offer, but can I accept her offer? Is this just a fake offer or is she really willing to pay half and not think I'm cheap? I'm fine with paying half, I think. Wait a second, she probably knows that I won't let her pay half. She is just offering knowing that I'm going to take the whole bill and pay even though she offered because I don't want to lose my honor. Well, she is in for a surprise.

"Okay that's fair. Let's go."

When In Manhattan... BY Oliver Peterson

Pure Winter in the City

Okay, so the blizzard was painful. It was beautiful and magical and landscape altering, but my back is sore and my driveway is really, really long. I drove halfway to Oakdale on 27 before the wind sheared off the last remnants of my car's 12-inch snow hairdo. It's actually snowing as I write this, but it seems the worst is over. The roads are manageable and by the time this issue comes out, the railroad should be without delay. You can make it to the city if you want to. There should be a nice coating of white left in many places there, while in others we'll find that filthy black slush unique to Manhattan, hugging curbs and dumpsters. Regardless of the inherent nastiness of a disintegrating winter cover in New York, there are a lot of fun things to do this time of year.

If there's still powder on the ground, or if we get more, Manhattan is one of the coolest places in the world for cross-country skiing. The sidewalks will be clear for sure, but you still might be able to hit Central Park's Sheep's Meadow or any of the other large open areas. All you need to do is look for the right spot. For future reference, if you can get yourself into town before a blizzard hits, sliding along the major thoroughfares on skis after a fresh snowstorm is unlike anything you may have experienced. When it's bad enough that the cars are almost nonexistent and a hush blankets the concrete, you'll turn the few heads that are outside trying to make their dogs go or enjoying the sights like you are. It's magnificent.

Should Central Park become your destination sans skiing, it's a majestic place to walk in the winter. Nostalgic feelings well up in me whenever I stroll along streets that remind me of American Impressionist paintings, or days of dignity gone by, when men wore top hats and threw down their coats in chivalrous acts. Maybe I'm overly romanticizing, but something about a horse-drawn-carriage coupled with winter weather gets me every time.

A carriage ride, by the way, is another excellent thing to do on a snowy evening in the city. Bundling up with your sweetie for a trot past the street-lamps in silence and in the shadow of the classic Plaza Hotel can never be a bad thing. After that, maybe shoot over to Wollman Rink just north of the 59th and 6th Avenue entrance to the park. The great ice skating mainstay was built in 1943, and has been hailed as an "urban landscaping masterpiece." It's Norman Rockwell in the city. It also happens to be featured in about a million romantic movies set in the cold season in New York. Where else can you go to catch your date as he/she falls and end up making out? Wollman is open late on weekends, and now it's operated by the Trump organization, so you can feel connected in some desperate way to your favorite television show. Before leaving the park, go to the zoo and see the polar bears, snow monkeys, sea lions and penguins to add to your frigid events dossier.

The entire city has a mood swing during these times. At rush hour, working people are ten times more stressed with their galoshes and the slush and the sleet and the icy, slippery trek. Meanwhile downtown in the Village there's playfulness out on the street. The bars stay busy, snowballs get thrown, and the unemployed and night workers roam about enjoying the change. I just love the smell in the air. Everything is different. It's a great time to visit a museum, shop, eat out, order in, watch a show, sing a song, meet a friend, take a date, walk the dog, build a snowman, dig an angel, or just mosey along and take it all in. The snow shouldn't stop life. It merely adds a little scenery and perhaps a dash of inconvenience. The beauty of Manhattan is that no one drives and it's a place that's bursting with the life we need to celebrate every day we're in it. Get out and play.

CLASSIC CARS WITH BOB GELBER

Snow balls. The big Swede Eric "On the Roof" Carlsson had them when he drove his Saab model 96 coupe to several winter Monte Carlo Rallye wins in the early sixties. During one race, his Saab completely flipped over after hitting a snow bank, thus earning him that colorful nickname. With the help of spectators, the car was righted and Carlsson continued the race. Erik Carlsson is the most legendary Rallye driver of all time and a name synonymous with Saab.

Considering the fact that Saab had only started to build automobiles in 1949, it was a testimonial to Saab's engineering talent that within ten years they were building race winning production cars. Saabs had a reputation for being very good in the snow, probably because they were designed in a country that gets more snow than Aspen. Don't forget, these were all front wheel drive cars and not four wheel drive vehicles. Due to their various rallye wins in inclement conditions, Saabs became best sellers in the Northeastern states like Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine.

Another great snow Rallye winning car was the original British Austin Mini. Designed ten years after the first front wheel drive Saab, this diminutive little charger, raced by Patty Hopkirk, another rallye legend, was a giant killer. The mighty Minis won the blizzard bound "Monte" race three times, much to the chagrin of the French who campaigned their Citroens with vigor.

Speaking of Citroens, since they had front wheel drive like the Saab and Mini, they were excellent in the snow. Years ago, on my weekly skiing excursions to Vermont, my dependable drive was a 67 Citroen ID 19. For the period, the mid-sixties, it was quite fast once you got up to speed, and excellent in the snow with its new steel belted Michelin tires. In those days, the best snow cars were the few that were produced with front wheel drive, with the advantage of the weight of the engine on the driving wheels.

Two other cars were very good in white-out conditions, the Volkswagen Beatle and the Porsche 356. Designed by the same guy, these cars had their engines and driving wheels at the other end of the car as compared to the Citroen, Saab and Mini. They were rear wheel drive and handled equally well in the snow. But on dry pavement their handling was quite different from a front driver. Porsches and Volkswagens over-steered, which meant their heavy rear ends tended to want to swing to the outside of a curve. The front drivers under-steered, so their heavy front ends tended to mush toward the outside of a curve. Today, most modern cars are front wheel drive and tend to under-steer, which for the average driver is considered to be a safer handling trait.

How did American cars of the sixties handle in the snow? In general, all American cars were rear wheel drive, had skinny bias ply tires and light rear ends. In a word, they were terrible. It was very common to put tire chains on the rear wheels to get the slightest bit of adhesion in the snow, but it was always a worry that they would fall off, or come loose and destroy the rear inner fender. But those chains were all we had then. Driving with chains was a terrible experience. You couldn't go very fast and they were so noisy. Of course, eventually, studded tires were invented and then banned because they were chewing up the road. But weren't chains doing the same? Now we have special winter compound snow tires that are exceptionally good. I was once invited to drive on a set in a display set up on an ice skating rink. I could barely walk to the demo car, but once in the car, it handled beautifully on the ice. The tires were Bridgestone Blizzaks and they are simply amazing. But be aware, dry weather handling suffers with them on your car.

Now to address all you Hamptonites in your five and seven thousand pound SUVs. Unless you have snowballs, drive those things slowly in the snow. Yes, I know they go like stink in the snow and you feel they are unstoppable. That's just the point: they are unstoppable. They may go, but because they are so heavy, they are actually harder to stop in slick conditions then a smaller, lighter car. Also like a tippy canoe, if you happen to slide sideways into a snow bank, the very height of your vehicle can cause it to overturn. These things turn over on dry pavement, so imagine it in the snow. You don't want the nickname, "On the Roof".

In any car, watch out for skidding. Remember to always steer into the skid until you have regained steering control. ABS brakes help tremendously. If your car doesn't have ABS, sell it NOW and buy a car so equipped. The Hamptons are beautiful with snow cover. Enjoy the view and the heating bills.

Shop 'til You Drop... With Maria Tennariello

Well, here it is, the biggie...The snowstorm of all snowstorms...Indeed the most I have ever seen at one time on the East End. My mom and grandson Anthony came for a visit and we were completely snowbound for more than three days. Thank goodness I did my shopping before it started...

The Old Quogue Farm on Old Depot Road and Montauk Highway in Quogue is ready, willing and able to take your Valentine's Day orders on flowers (same day, anywhere-anytime), gift baskets., orchids, and unique gifts. Stop in and get some hugs and kisses here.

Nancy of Nancy & Co. on Jobs Lane in the Southampton store only, is out of town again and is having a "Huge Winter Sale" with most of her merchandise below cost. There are items including ladies clothing and accessories that start from $5 to $100 available at this twice a year sale...Get going while the flavor lasts.

If you are on the East End on Saturday, January 29, from 4 to 8 p.m. stop into a new store called Lavender (formerly Artistry in Flowers) at 27 Hampton Road to join owners, Phil Prionti and Michael Conforti in the celebration of their "Champagne Grand Opening" of this new upscale, full service fine flower and gift shop. See you there!

Watermill's Piano Barn on Montauk Highway is having their January piano "Clearance Sale" and nothing is being held back...Now is the time to play your tunes and make music on these dreary winter days. Everyone is in mint condition and Mike will tune and deliver your piano free. Give him a call at 631-726-4640 for information on this great sale.

Wendy's Fabric East on Montauk Highway in Water Mill is having a having a January "White Sale" on all tapestry fabrics and lightweight fabrics and Christmas fabrics that are slashed down to 50% off. Included in this sale is a 20% off all slipcover and drapery fabrics. Get sewing.

English Country Antique's main store on Snake Hollow Road in Bridgehampton and their outlet store on North Sea Road in Southampton is having their annual "White Sale" with 30% to 50% off. Now is the time to stock up on all those necessities. Have fun; this is a great place to shop!

Bridgehampton's Aimee's Closet on Main Street is having a 20% to 50% off sale on selected clothing, accessories and jewelry...Aimee's is known for her unique and eclectic merchandise, so when she has this sale...everyone shops here, including me...

Tutte Bene, also on Main Street in Bridgehampton, is having a sale on great winter merchandise including gloves, hats, scarves, clothing and more. Stop in and check this one out...

On Main Street in East Hampton, check out the sales at Rum Runner. This store has unique and eclectic home furnishings and accessories to choose from.

Nearby at Shoe Inn, now is the time to get those boots that you have been looking for all winter. They are here, on sale, and ready to go. Get going while the sale lasts...

Calypso, also on Main Street in East Hampton, is running a "Winter Sale" on a nice selection of ladies' clothing and accessories. Love this shop!

If you are thinking of using the dreary winter days to clean out your closets, it is a good idea! Long Island Closet Design is taking 10% off any order of $1,000 or more when you mention Dan's Papers...Now that is an incentive to start cleaning out and thinking of built-ins, pantries, laundry rooms, and home offices. Give them a call at 1-866-LICIOSET to get yourself on the right track.

In Sag Harbor on Main Street, Latham House is having their annual 50% off sale on selected merchandise. This is a popular men's clothing and accessory store and now is the time to pick up all your favorites at half price...Go for it, Valentine's Day is around the corner.

Until next week. Ciao and happy winter shopping!

If your shop is having a sale, I would love to know about it. E-mail me at: shoptil@danspapers.com or by fax at: 631-537-0500.

CAMP & RECREATION

Child's Play And A Whole Lot More

Creative Play, located in Quogue, is a place that every child should have the opportunity to experience. The only one of its kind within 45 miles, Creative Play offers an opportunity for social interaction between children and parents. Their classes focus on establishing your child's confidence and self-esteem with age and developmentally appropriate classes. The parent-child bond is strengthened and encouraged as parents get to explore their child's world of play.

Creative Play was established by Kristine Duncan, a registered nurse since 1981. After moving to the East End, she realized that it was not just a summer retreat, but a well-loved home to many year-round residents. Kristine is also a certified personal trainer with a specialty in maternal fitness. Creative Play's staff also includes certified schoolteachers, a baby massage therapist, a speech pathologist, and students. Since exercise is an important part of children's lives and parents' lives as well, the staff at Creative Play concentrates on the positive aspects of exercise in a safe, healthy environment.

The Open Gym program allows children to enjoy everything Creative Play offers. Children can enjoy the trampoline, obstacle course, parachute game, bouncing house, and much more. Ruby Ernst, age 4, of Hampton Bays, stated, "The zip line is my favorite, and I just love going to that place." Ruby visited Creative Play for a birthday party, and has returned four times since then. Her mother commented on the fact that everything Creative Play has to offer is specifically planned for each child's age and level of development. Open Gym hours are always different depending on what private parties are being held. You should always call to get their weekly schedule and there is always the option of renting the facility for private Open Gym sessions or playgroups.

A day at Creative Play

Looking for a place to have a not so ordinary birthday party for your child? Their 2,500 square foot air-conditioned location is the perfect place. When you celebrate your child's birthday at Creative Play, you are supplied with your own personal party host and staff to keep your party running smoothly. They offer a variety of age appropriate party activities, such as face painting, tattoos, piñatas, arts and crafts, and make your own sundaes. You can also have a certain theme, such as princess or superhero parties.

Becoming involved in the Parent and Tot programs at Creative Play can only help you better understand your child's level of development and speed up their learning process. Baby Gym (up to 6 months) is where moms and dads cuddle and bond with their tiny ones. A new topic is discussed every time the group meets, and it also gives parents a chance to make friends and share experiences. Inch Worms (6-12 months) is for infants who are starting to crawl and explore. Group discussion includes music, a colorful parachute, and focuses on enhancing strength and coordination. Waddlers (10-18 months) is geared toward those that are just learning how to walk. They have the opportunity to participate in a marching band and a stimulating obstacle course. Gym Kids (18 months-2 years) is where motor skills are further enhanced through games and group activities. This group is especially exciting, as you can listen to your child sing and laugh along with others his/her own age. Big Kids (2-3 years) is where listening and comprehensive skills are increased with more activities to stimulate their minds. Children are encouraged to participate in some activities on their own, while proud parents are still present to oversee their child's impressive development. As your child grows older, other specialty programs include Lunch Bunch, Tumble Tots, Intro to Sports, Cardio Kids, and Tumble and Cheer.

Creative Play also offers an extensive program for expectant mothers called MOTHERWELL. This program provides for a safe method of helping pregnant women improve their fitness levels, enhance their sense of well-being, stay active longer throughout their pregnancy, and shape up quickly after delivery.

The facility is located at 7 Midhampton Ave., in Quogue. You can check out their website, www.creative-play.net for more detailed information, or give them a call at 653-6500. Be prepared to answer questions when you call. The staff at Creative Play will want to be sure they find the perfect program or throw the best party for both you and your child.

JUST FOR KIDS

A Few Of The Greatest Children's Films Of Our Time

Children's films take us to magical places with dreamy characters that captivate our hearts, but the true test of any great piece of cinema is longevity. A film that can be watched over and over, for years to come, is a classic. Here are just a few of my favorite pics.

Let's open with the most classic family film of all time (at least in my book); The Wizard of Oz, directed by Victor Fleming and starring Judy Garland as Dorothy Gale. With a cast of many other unforgettable characters like the Scarecrow, Cowardly Lion, Tin Man, Auntie Em, Toto, the Wicked Witches of the East and West, and Glinda, the Good Witch. The Wizard of Oz is a remarkable accomplishment in film history because of the significance of each character. The flaws of each character help us to identify with real life. This film is a lesson in respecting others despite our differences. And, it always reminds us, "there's no place like home."

On to 1964's Mary Poppins, starring a very familiar face to the Hamptons, Julie Andrews, as the magical nanny who gets a job working for a very unhappy family and manages to teach them the positive side of things. We watch in awe as Mary Poppins glides through the air with her special umbrella. It's supercalifragilisticexpialidocious!

Next up is Willy Wonka & the Chocolate Factory starring Gene Wilder as Willy Wonka and Peter Ostrum as Charlie Bucket. This 1971 favorite has recently been re-made for 2005 under the direction of the magnificent dynamic duo of director Tim Burton and lead actor Johnny Depp. The film tells the story of a poor boy that wins the "golden egg"...a free pass to tour the most amazing candy factory in all of England. We identify with the boy's innocence and golden heart as we watch the relationship between Mr. Wonka and young Charlie blossom. Willy Wonka sings "There is no life I know to compare with pure imagination. Living there, you'll be free if you truly wish to be."

I think the world fell in love with the extra-terrestrial in Melissa Mathison's brilliant screenplay E.T., directed by Steven Speilberg in 1982. The adorable Drew Barrymore, co-stars Henry Thomas and Dee Wallace-Stone touched our hearts and souls with this powerful groundbreaking film. E.T.'s adventures here on earth connected us to another world. We are left feeling a sense of belonging and re-connection to the universe and the people that we hold sacred in our lives. "E.T. phone home."

We next arrive at an array of animated features including such films as Beauty and The Beast, The Lion King, Aladdin, Bambi, Fantasia, and The Little Mermaid just to name a few. Animation has evolved into something beyond imagination. The combination of vivid colors, special effects and star-studded voice-overs is captivating. Our eyes never leave the screen for a second.

There are so many films to choose from and many are available on DVD and VHS. According to www.epinions.com, the top ten videos to rent or buy include 1. Shrek and Shrek 2 2. Spy Kids 3. Remember the Titans 4. Dr. Seuss' How the Grinch Stole Christmas 5. Peter Pan 6. Veggie Tales: Lyle the Kindly Viking – A Lesson in Sharing 7. Hans Christian Anderson 8. Anne Frank: The Whole Story 9. Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs 10. The Book of Pooh.

Family films will forever be an important part of our lives. With so many controversial issues concerning how we monitor what our children watch, it's important to honor those films that play a positive role in their lives. These wonderful characters and films become our friends for life and as Winnie the Pooh says, "a day without a friend is like a pot without a single drop of honey left inside."

Entertainment In The Hamptons

theatre review: dame edna: back with a vengeance...by gordin & christiano

This fall theatre season we have seen five one-person shows opening on Broadway and several others debuting Off-Broadway. Thinking back over the past several seasons, it seems there have been a number of one-person shows, which may be an increasing trend by producers to make a fast buck by limiting costs with these relatively easily mounted vehicles, which seem more appropriate to Las Vegas, but of late have found their niché on the Great White Way. Of course many of these shows have been immensely entertaining, but hardly the fare one normally associates with Broadway. I believe Mario Cantone, the self-anointed queen of mean spirited humor, was the first to cash in this season with his Laugh Whore and then Eve Ensler, who previously brought us the popular The Vagina Monologues, followed that success with The Good Body at the Booth Theatre. Next up was the incomparable mega-star Whoopi Goldberg, who reprised and updated the Mike Nichols show that launched her two decades ago under the banner Whoopi the 20th Anniversary, which is still running at the Lyceum Theatre. Billy Crystal, another multi-talented international celebrity, moved us with his personal and touching tribute to his family and friends, 700 Sundays, one of Broadway's hottest tickets, at the Broadhurst Theatre. Somewhere in this mix we got Barry Humphries in the guise of Dame Edna, a superstar from Australia, who five years ago made her Broadway debut in Dame Edna: The Royal Tour. Now she's back and amusing us once again in Dame Edna: Back with a Vengeance, written and directed by Mr. Humphries.

Dame Edna began her journey to superstardom over 30 years ago as Edna Everage, the creation of Barry Humpries, who at the time was a relatively unknown young actor/comedian from down under. Today Edna is a lavender haired dame, an international luminary who has grown glitzier and more outrageous than ever. Heavily bejeweled and gowned in bold colorful sequined numbers that drape her matronly figure, Dame Edna basks in the limelight of the adoring fans she calls her "possums" secure in the knowledge of her celebrity status and relishing every moment. Dame Edna reminds us early in her show that when she last appeared on Broadway she was merely a megastar, but today, five years later, she is now "a glittering gigastar" and ever so proud of it.

Dame Edna descends from the sky at the opening of her show and quickly reveals her silver lame evening gown, which will be replaced in the second act with an outrageous, sequined and feathered one. Her funny show relies heavily on audience participation and therefore will be different on every night. The witty Dame has a razor sharp tongue and is a master of the ad-lib, so I wouldn't advise getting into any arguments with her. The barbs, however, are all done with good-natured fun. She dispenses marital counseling and gives psychic shoe readings with her memorable style and charm. Backed by a troop of hunky chorus boys, she sings and dances to Wayne Barker's accompaniment on the piano.

Unfortunately, compared to her Broadway outing five years ago, this new evening is not nearly as funny, but remains a humorous homage to the Dame's many gifts, her talent for ad-lib at the top of the list. If you are among those who have never seen the Dame and are looking for a silly irreverent good time, by all means rush on over.

Dame Edna: Back with a Vengeance! is now playing at the Music Box Theatre, 239 West 45th Street between Broadway and Eighth Avenue. For tickets call 212-239-6200 or go to the box office.

Barry Gordin and Patrick Christiano are theatre critics. Barry Gordin is an internationally renowned photographer. They can be reached at bg6@verizon.net.

Beyond The Sea

Splish Splash. Though it's called Beyond The Sea, this peaceful, private island I'm basking upon like a lizard on a rock is not the place to screen a review videotape of the weird movie with that title. The Bahamian Islands' reefs and cays are lush with absolute sincerity and here I am, doing my duty, watching a bizarre, bongo-boffo "tribute" to Bobby Darin. Bobby Darin? The popular (for a while) finger-snapping, hip-huh singer of the late 50s and 60s. A tuxedo outfitted, punky looking, Sinatra copycat. Strictly a lounge act entertainer (Talk about lizards). Leapin' lizards! Why am I not surprised that Kevin Spacey has felt, ardently, for years, that he had to tell this story? Maybe it is because Mr. Stacey has built his career on impersonations. Some are uncanny, like his Johnny Carson and Al Pacino. The Carson impression tells you how far back Kevin goes. So, right off the bat, you know that for him to play Darin it would be a bit dicey because when Darin was Kevin's age, he'd been dead for 8 years. A good bit of the drama squeezed out of the Darin story is that he died at age 37 though because of his tough tenacity he lived far longer than was expected to, having suffered a weak heart as a result of rheumatic fever. Age and a little thickness aside, Spacey has Darin down pat. He can snap his fingers as jauntily as any Las Vegas sleaze banger. Mr. Spacey's labor of love has him directing and writing the screenplay with Lewis Colick, and singing, taking dance lessons and putting on a putty nose. In a way, unfortunately, he gets all of Darin's puffed-up bully bragging (I guess), his clawing ambition, and probably his attraction to audiences, and the ever-lovin' rags to ritzy riches obsession.

The Gospel according to the Rat Pack has Darin hot after a movie teenage idol, Sandra Dee. Darin got his idol niche in 1958 with his recording of "Splish Splash." Sandra Dee made movies that caused young nerds' temperatures to rise. She was considered hot stuff and a must-have movie star that Darin had to have to be up there with Eddie Fisher and, of course, Sinatra. They had Taylor and Gardner. Kate Bosworth as Dee is somewhat extravagant but, isn't it all? Being a bio pic we get DocuDrama "inside stuff:" Sandra Dee's mother, not unlike other show biz moms, was an ambitious, pushy, let's-make-it-mom who made out just fine for herself. As for Darin's Mom – she wasn't his Mom, she was his grandmother. His sister was his Mom. Hey, don't look to me. Kevin's the guy you have to see.

Musical bios require the drama to segue repeatedly into musical dance numbers and fortunately, in this instance, they are excellent. You'll be snappin' your fingers and your hips. Hip-Hup-HUH!

This has been the year of the bio pic. HBO's Life and Death of Peter Sellers has a lot in common with this Bobby Darin picture. Much ado about a minor talent who was more of an annoyance when alive and not missed a whit when gone early in life. Beyond The Sea, as compared to the Cole Porter bio pic De-Lovely, at least has life. And, as compared to Ray, the Ray Charles musical biography, Spacey's Darin is a midget. For one thing, Ray is the story of a towering musical genius. Bobby Darin even tried to copy Charles when he was slipping – just as he had in the beginning mimicked Sinatra. Boy, imitating celebrities is gain worthy. Kevin Spacey can go on to do the life and hard times of Johnny Carson and Al Pacino or Howdy Doody. He might even do himself – if there is a self.

ART COMMENTARY With Marion Wolberg Weiss

THE ART SCENE: FAR FROM THE HAMPTONS

Part III: New York's Hotel Chelsea

The Hotel Chelsea, like the "old" MoMA featured in last week's Art Commentary, has an illustrious past associated with this critic's personal experiences. After all, it was the 1960s that brought hippy culture to the nation and Andy Warhol and Sid Vicious (Sex Pistols) to the Chelsea. (Not to mention Tennessee Williams, Arthur Miller and Eugene O'Neill at other times.)

The 1960s also brought yours truly to haunt the Chelsea's lobby hoping to see any or all of the above. Don't get me wrong. I was not a stalker, or even a traditional " groupie." I just liked to absorb the hotel's atmosphere. Back then, it was an aesthetic oasis for bad taste: mix-and-match furniture, punk art, garish colors. I loved it.

But what set the hotel apart were those wrought-iron staircases. They were symbols for the hotel as well as for me: stylistically ornate and bohemian, literal connections between floors, philosophical linkages between sensibilities and decades. (The Chelsea was build as a co-op in 1882.)

My imagination used to run amok with possibilities. Did Miller ever race down those same stairs, to share a scene or two with Williams?

Nowadays, there are still remnants of previous days. The lobby is still eclectic; the abstract art is anything but genteel. It's still "in-your-face." The lobby is still filled with "characters," many of whom are permanent residents. The wrought-iron railings are still there, too.

This time, however, I wasn't just an observer. I was a guest, staying in a suite with Art Deco lamps, Expressionist paintings, a contemporary kitchenette, a Victorian lounge and dark wood floors. It was still the same charming hybrid decor but with a kind of "class" and "character" that's hard to duplicate. "Character" is an especially descriptive term, connoting Chelsea's odd assortment of inhabitants through the years and also literary characters and figures who may have been created here by writers and artists.

Even so, the Chelsea wouldn't be what it is without the paintings hanging on the walls between floors. Such a phenomenon triggers a most fascinating process, akin, oddly enough, to experiencing MoMA's art from its ascending escalator. Unlike the MoMA event, however, we are climbing the floors by foot at the Chelsea, the staircase serving as a foregrounded structure that "frames" the images on the wall. Thus, the works are glimpsed through the staircase, its elaborate and contorted design adding another dimension to the experience.

There's a second spatial aspect to this experience that's equally intriguing. As we transcend the levels, seeing the pieces from a worm's eye view, we recall the power of vertical, rather than horizontal space, which also characterized riding the escalator at MoMA.

Both experiences beat standing immobile, looking at works on a wall, any day of the week.

Many thanks to the hospitality of Chelsea's Manager, David Bard. The Chelsea Hotel is at 23rd. and Seventh Avenue. (Tel: 212- 243- 3700)

Honoring the Artist: David Geiser

The blizzard hadn't even struck the East End yet, but cover artist David Geiser's voice was full of excitement as we spoke on the phone. Obviously, he had other things provoking his enthusiasm. One such event is the upcoming theatrical piece about Peggy Guggenheim for which his wife, actress Mercedes Ruehl, is currently preparing.

Another is the exhibit he is preparing. It's clear that Mr. Geiser is passionate about art and doesn't consider it stressful at all to devote his waking hours almost entirely to creating works under a deadline.

"Passion" is a word that Mr. Geiser keeps coming back to in his conversation; so is the idea of spirituality. "Anything I do, things that I collect, like Tribal art (particularly masks and shields) and outsider art, must impact on me in a spiritual way; they must have a spiritual structure," he explains with vigor. "Tribal art has less to do with art; it also goes beyond craft. It's the making of the work that I relate to. I can feel its resonance, the hands it has passed through."

Mr. Geiser talks about his penchant for a "hands-on" approach in his own endeavors: "I build up surfaces, create a topography with materials. In my work, skeins drift across the canvas like stream bed deposits. I aim for my work to look transparent, like looking into the eye of an opal."

It's apparent that this method also relates to Mr. Geiser's belief in material as "the character of painting," both literally and figuratively. He patiently explains, for example, how pigment is just a "handful of dirt, stuff out of the earth." Simply put, material must come from the natural world in this artist's view.

We begin to wonder if there's a philosophical or aesthetic contradiction here. While Mr. Geiser's use of natural materials and a direct hands-on approach signify a product-oriented focus, there's also his idea of spirituality that transcends earthly concerns.

Regarding the spiritual emphasis, Mr. Geiser defines his cover piece, "Thorn Crown," as an ephemeral image conveying the process of both "becoming and degenerating." Obviously, this is a contradictory idea as well, one having an affinity with Eastern religion and philosophy.

The oppositional elements in Mr. Geiser's work are reinforced when he tells us he created underground comics with social-political themes during the 1960s. We can only imagine his pieces during the hippy days in San Francisco, a place he called home for several years. "I was supposed to go to Yale on a fellowship after graduating from the University of Vermont," Mr. Geiser says, filling us in. "But there was too much to learn in San Francisco. Then I went to Paris for a year, then back to California and then finally to New York."

It was in New York during the 1980s that Mr. Geiser followed his unconventional pursuits again, moving into a SoHo studio above the Paul Taylor Dance Company, renting out space to other artists. He was there for 15 years, but "When the Banana Republic moved into the building, I knew that was the end," he says with a laugh.

Mr. Geiser doesn't seem the kind of person who would object if his worldview was characterized as "contradictory" He says that individuals interpret his works differently.

"Some people express themselves through singing or acting. I do it through art. I just want to be moved and to do something that moves people. When a work of art hits me, that's the wonder of it all."

Well said, Mr. Geiser. And expressed with passion, too.

–Marion Wolberg Weiss

Mr. Geiser's work will be on view at Southampton's Hampton Road Gallery. The opening is June 29. The gallery's owner, Peter Marcelle, will be featuring Mr. Geiser's art in a new Chelsea gallery in the near future.

Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

Have we run out of steam on the carbohydrate craze? Has the fate of the fusilli gone belly-up? Perhaps not for some folk, but within reason, pasta, a food we have loved and cooked, is here to stay. It is still being offered on most restaurant menus and while I do all of my pasta eating at home, I have been in the company of those that will opt for a pasta main course when dining out.

And perhaps therein lies the problem. Pasta in Italy is always eaten as a first course and in smaller quantities that we are accustomed to. When teaching pasta recipes in my cooking classes and I suggest a pound of pasta will serve 6, my students retort, "My husband can eat the whole thing!" The idea behind eating pasta as the first course is it takes the edge off the appetite. This is generally followed by a sauté, a roast, or grilled piece of fish, chicken or meat with perhaps a side dish of a vegetable or salad. Makes sense, doesn't it?

Spinach linguine with walnuts and garlic is a dish that my mother prepared for her family of five kids and so this pasta dish, with a one pound box of pasta, fed us all. Spaghetti, in one form or another, was always on our Thursday night dinner menu, followed by sautéed fish fillets and a vegetable. Little did I realize how on target she was. The recipe below is adapted and prepared with nested spinach noodles that come in an 8-ounce box, which is enough for four servings. With the continued chill in the air I have a yen for whole grain pasta and chicken soup. Buckwheat noodles, available in health food stores, are cooked and served in a bowl of gingered broth to clear the sinuses and sooth the senses.

SPINACH EGG NOODLES WITH WALNUTS AND GARLIC

Imported, but brand familiar spinach egg noodles are available in your local supermarket.

Serves 4

1 pound nested spinach egg noodles

1 tablespoon coarse (kosher) salt for the pasta water

For the sauce

1/2 cup extra-virgin olive oil

2-3 cloves garlic, finely chopped

1/3 cup walnut pieces, coarsely chopped

Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper to taste

2-3 tablespoons chopped flat leaf Italian parsley

1. Fill a large, 5-6 quart, saucepan with fresh cold water and bring to a boil. Stir in salt to dissolve. Add the pasta all at once, cover pot to return the water to a boil, uncover the pot and cook the noodles, stirring to loosen, for 4 minutes according to package directions.

2. Meanwhile, warm the oil in a skillet large enough to hold the drained pasta, over medium-low heat. Put in the garlic and walnuts. Sauté for about 2 minutes just until the garlic is lightly golden and walnuts are toasty. Ladle about 2 tablespoons of the pasta cooking water into the garlic and walnuts. Add salt and pepper to taste, stir to mix and keep warm over low heat.

3. Drain the pasta, transfer at once to the skillet and toss to mix with the walnut sauce. Taste to adjust seasoning if necessary, sprinkle over parsley and serve immediately.

BUCKWHEAT NOODLES AND CHICKEN SOUP

Use buckwheat noodles, available at health food stores, or whole grain spaghetti, in a bowl of gingered chicken broth to clear the sinuses and soothe the senses.

Serves 4-6

1 pound buckwheat noodles or whole grain spaghetti

2-3 teaspoons salt for the pasta water

6 cups chicken broth, preferably homemade or low-sodium canned*

1 bunch scallions, cleaned and thinly sliced

1/2-inch piece ginger, peeled, sliced and cut into julienne

2-3 thin lemon slices

Coarse salt and freshly ground pepper

2 boneless, skinless chicken breasts cut into 1/2-inch strips

1. Break noodles or spaghetti strands into thirds.

2. In a large saucepan, bring 4-5 quarts water to a rolling boil, add salt and put in the pasta. Return the water to an immediate boil and cook briskly for 7-8 minutes until pasta is al-dente. Ladle 2-3 tablespoons cooking water into a bowl and reserve. Drain pasta and toss with the reserved cooking water in the bowl.

3. Meanwhile, put chicken broth into a separate saucepan with the scallions, ginger, lemon slices. Salt and pepper to taste. Cover and simmer over low heat for 20 minutes. Several minutes before the soup is ready, put the strips of chicken into the seasoned broth and simmer for 3-4 minutes until the pieces are cooked. Taste to adjust seasoning if necessary.

4. Divide the cooked noodles into 6 bowls and ladle the scallion ginger broth and pieces of chicken equally into each bowl. Serve hot.

*Note If using canned broth use salt judiciously for even low-sodium is somewhat salty, or eliminate salt entirely.

Don't let the winter's chill keep you from venturing out. Experience the cozy warmth created by fireplace dining. Whether you are looking for a romantic night out or a casual meal with friends, try a restaurant with a fireplace and forget about the snow outside. Some of the places around town boasting a warm hearth include some perennial favorites like Della Femina, The American Hotel, Laundry, Plaza Café, 1770 House, Robert's, James Lane Café, Saracen and The Cooperage Inn. For a more casual dining experience near a crackling fire try World Pie, Southampton Publick House, O'Mally's, Farmhouse, or Rowdy Hall.

Goldberg's Bagels has opened a new location at 100 Pantigo Place in East Hampton. Known for their famous bagels and flagels, Goldberg's boasts a full line of spreads and cream cheeses made fresh. Not just a bagel store, they also have a full deli offering breakfast items like omelets and French toast along with lunch choices including healthy salads, hot pastrami and hot corned beef sandwiches as well as homemade knishes and potato pancakes. Goldberg's is now open seven days a week from 6:30 a.m. For further information or to place an order call (631) 329-8300.

The Southampton Publick House has a new special on tap and for once it's not a new beer. This long-time hang out for local East Enders now offers Taproom and Pub patrons the World Wide Web. Now you can enjoy a pint of your favorite Southampton Publick House beer while you surf the Internet. Wireless internet service is now available in the Taproom and Pub so you can stay connected whether you are grabbing a quick lunch or a few beers with friends. For more information or reservations please call (631) 283-2800.

A Side Note... The "Hamptons Restaurant Week" 2005 website has been officially launched. Visit www.hamptonsrestaurantweek.com now for a complete list of participants along with the various discounts and promotions offered this year. "Hamptons Restaurant Week" will be held Sunday, April 3rd thru Sunday, April 10th and promises to be an event you don't want to miss.

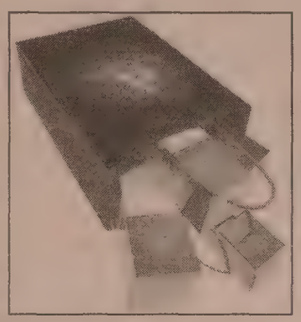
Home at the Beach

Gone are the days of tiptoeing in soft sumptuous sand and dipping pinkies in the ocean. No more can we wander down to the beach in a pair of shorts and a tank, or immerse ourselves in the beautiful blue sea just to cool down, enjoying its all encompassing, temperature dropping embrace. These days, one would be more likely to ice skate on the ocean than swim with the fishes. And though we may still enjoy a walk along the beach, it's more of a brisk trot than a meander. And one wouldn't dream of wearing less than three layers, a hat, scarf, and gloves to boot. Where have those lazy, hazy days of summer gone, when sea, sand, and sun were a mere step or two away? Can someone please tell me?



If, like me, you're waxing lyrical about how much you miss the beach in summer, then "hang ten" and surf your way into the next best thing. Here's how to bring back all those wonderful seaside memories, and what's more, you won't have to leave the comfort of your cozy living room to get them.

Seaweed, sea salt and marine based products have been used for centuries for nutritional and medical purposes, in all forms and formulas. So it makes sense that during the winter months we might feel a sense of loss when not being able to dunk our bodies in that wet stuff. But there's an alternative; because of the countless old remedies designed around the sea, scientists have recently set out to discover how to extract and package its abundant nutrients to nourish, re-mineralize and fortify the skin and body. Algotherm and Phytomer are leading thalassotherapy and balneotherapy (a.k.a. marine based products) companies who have perfected the benefits of the ocean. Both brands have fabulous and extensive marine based health and beauty products. But these days, many other health and beauty companies are jumping into deep water, too.

Here's how you can take the plunge:

First get off the couch and head over to the thermostat. Turn up the heat to, hmmm, say about 80 degrees. Let's not make it too hot, but hot enough to feel the odd bead of sweat (perspiration for us ladies). Get out your favorite swim suit and, what the heck, put it on. You might be feeling a little silly at this point and so to be on the safe side, lock all the doors so that no one will spoil your day at home, at the beach.

To really get into the swing of things you might want to start by cleansing with some algae. Splash on DDF Marine cleanser with pure seaweed extracts to revitalize winter worn skin ($27), or try Aqua Dessa Spa's Seaweed Detox Foam Facial Cleanser ($25), the vitamins, minerals, and antioxidants that are rich in seaweeds are abundant in these products. Then how about patting on some Algotherm Eyes Relax Fresh Mask containing Marine and plant active ingredients including red algae.

Take a dip in Bliss' High Thighs Seaweed Task Mask ($45). Lather it on to take care of any lumps and bumps on legs and thighs that you've been neglecting. While that's taking effect, boogie board onto Astara's (Conscious Skin Care) Activated Sea Mineral Mask $39. As you relax, the sea minerals and seaweed contained within work wonders to give you energy and a new lease on life.

Take the plunge; run a bath, or shower. During your soak, you might want to have some of Bliss' Serious Cellulite Seaweed Soap on hand, perhaps pick from Joey New York's Seaweed Body Wash ($20), Molton Brown's Energizing Seamoss Bath & Shower Gel ($23) and their Seamoss Stress-Relieving Hydrasoak ($29) or Aqua Dessa Spa Seaweed Detox Bath $36. By now your bathroom should feel like a marine biologist's paradise and you should feel fairly tropical, too. When you eventually dry off, prune like, from your bathing, gents might want to try Zirh's Shave Gel and shave cream ($14-20) with rare seaweed extracts to help firm the skin, causing hair follicles to lift for a wonderfully close shave. Ladies might want to make like a mermaid, sprucing up a bit with Sue Devitts Studio's Triple C-Weed Whipped Foundation ($40). This make-up formula contains valuable minerals and nutrients from three types of organic seaweeds. Then finish the look with Devitts Seaweed Clearwater Gels For Eyes & Cheeks $35. Tints of Aqua or coral might be appropriate choices.

Now all that's left to do after a relaxing day at the beach is stay at home, (the one you never left) in front of the fire and have a nice cup o' tea... Seaweed tea. Algotherm's Calming Tea (pack of 12 for $12) is, of course, enhanced with Laminaria seaweed. One sip of this wonderful wet stuff should submerge you into the perfect sleep after such a long exhausting day at the beach.

"Let Me Tell You How I Improved My Looks Naturally"

I hated the way my face looked because of my severe acne scarring. One laser treatment did more for my acne scarring than everything I tried in the past combined!" Salvatore Casciotta, General Contractor, Hampton Bays, NY, Age 58

"My eyes were getting smaller and my eyelids were drooping. After my full face Thermage treatment, I feel like I had a real face lift without the surgery. I was thrilled to see the immediate results and my boyfriend was able to notice an amazing difference in less than 24 hours." Carol Reina, Warranty Administrator, Shirley, NY, Age 49

"My problem areas included my hips and thighs and I feel that my body was disproportionate. The non-invasive mesotherapy treatments allowed me to continue my daily activities. After four treatments I have reduced the size and shape of my lower body. I feel healthier and more confident about my body than every before." Susan Williams, Charter Manager, Hampton Bays, NY Age 35

"Not a week goes by where I don't run into a friend or acquaintance and they ask me what I did to my face because I look so fabulous!" Caryl Zwecker, Retail Manger, Woodbury, NY, Age 43

A Dry, Well Lit Place

The other day I got into an intense conversation about light bulbs. Robin Smith (Managing Editor of this paper), who just had her home professionally lit, inside and out, was raving about the difference it makes in how the house looks and how it feels to be home. On a recommendation, she had called Jim Daniels at G. Craig Electric and he came up with a plan for creative and inventive interior and exterior light placement.

"It is bright and safe outside now, without being intrusive into the neighborhood, and more atmospheric and softer inside than it was before. Before, I just had lights where the last owners thought to put them. It wasn't right for me at all. I'm not finished with this project but so far, I couldn't be happier with the changes," Robin told me. After we talked, I headed home, pulling in my unlit driveway, trudging up the dark, slippery front walk, losing my footing and crashing down on the frozen slate path. While sitting on the ground, a light bulb went off in my head.

It's cold. It's dark. It's winter. My unrelenting quest for more daylight, although understandable, may very well be futile. There is no way to change tilt of the Earth. And there is no way to speed up the seasons. But, I decided, there is one way to brighten up the day.

The light bulb, a fixture in our lives that generally doesn't warrant any more attention than that moment when we flip a switch, may actually deserve a little more consideration. The world of interior and exterior lighting is constantly evolving. Trends make some fixtures smaller, others larger. They are being hidden in the trees, under cabinets, behind paintings, and disguised as rocks, but also, conversely, as a focal piece or an accent in a room. The way you light your house tells people a lot about you.

Lighting schemes can be inviting and warm, dark and mysterious, or subtle and romantic. And, unlike many aspects of the home, changing the lighting scheme doesn't necessarily mean renovating the entire house. You can find clever ways to add brightness, change a mood, increase visibility, and charge up the atmosphere anywhere in the house. If a home is older, the wiring may need updating, but generally the installation of new lights in and outside the house can be done in a couple of days.

The first step is to determine what you are looking for. Instead of letting the lights establish the uses of the room, allow the uses of the room to determine the lighting. No one wants a study that can only handle 40-watt bulbs, making it practically impossible to read a good book without going blind. On the opposite side of the spectrum, over-lighting can make relaxing in the living room impossible. Be job specific. The average person designs their family room and den for comfort. The lighting should reflect that. Although a primary light fixture or a chandelier with a dimmer can do the job, floor lamps, table lamps, and wall sconces work well to pull the attention away from the middle of the room and allow a warm soft glow to surround you as you unwind.

In the dining room, hanging a chandelier in the center of the room is essential in order to cast the glow onto the dinner table. Try adding candlabras and wall lights for added ambiance. Avoid harsh, bright bulbs. This is a dining room, not a cafeteria. On the other hand, it may be a good idea to pop a few crisp, bright lights under a cabinet or two in the kitchen. A dark kitchen can only lead to mistakes. Poor lighting is no excuse for confusing a finger for a carrot.

In many rooms a safe bet is generally recessed lightening (high hats). Over the past twenty years or so, these versatile and unobtrusive fixtures have been reduced to nearly half their original size, and still maintain their brightness. While the original trend with these lights was to recess them in the corners of ceilings with black baffles, they are now set in single rows with white baffles or painted baffles to match the room. The overall effect is lovely subtlety.

In the summer it is fairly common to see backyard and patio lights, but it is also important to remember lighting in the winter. It becomes extremely dangerous when you are shuffling along the driveway in ice and snow. Time and motion sensor floodlights have been available for years, but electricians are becoming more creative as to where they install them. Traditionally floodlights were mounted on the fronts of houses and garages, but this created a few problems: a glaring, practically blinding light whenever someone enters the driveway, and also the feeling that our beautiful, natural Hamptons environment has become a block on Broadway. G. Craig Electric is widely known for placing outdoor floodlights in the trees surrounding the front lawn and drive. The lighting gives a more natural and even light, as well as the safety and security we all desire. To go a step further in hiding the lighting fixtures, Jim Daniels paints the electric cables and housings to match the tree bark, making them practically invisible.

Less obtrusive seems to be the trend these days. Unless you are using a fabulous fixture as an eye-catching element in the room, try to install lights in the least conspicuous way. Mr. Daniels reminds us that there are two main concerns when outfitting your home: function and aesthetic.

The Garden At Rock Cottage by Lance Brilliantine

Glorious Figs

Perhaps because I have an Italian heritage – my childhood was filled with figs! As a child I enjoyed helping my grandfather unwrap our fig tree each spring, anticipated the ripening of the luscious fruit in fall, and also enjoyed the yearly ritual of wrapping the tree in late fall to help it survive through the winter. It is probable that this experience influenced my insistence on having at least one specimen in the garden at Rock Cottage. The tree provides a tropical feel with its large leaves and never ceases to get comments from guests.

While figs are mostly cultivated in the Mediterranean, California, and other dry warm-temperature climates, they can be successful in the East End climate. Figs (ficus carica) are part of the family of plants known as Moraceae, which also includes the mulberries, jackfruits, and breadfruits. Figs are thought to have come from western Asia, and were distributed, early on, by man throughout the Mediterranean. Remnants of figs have been found in excavations of archeological sites dating back to at least 5,000 B.C.

While fig trees reach enormous heights in their indigenous climates, in the Northeast they survive as multi-branched shrubs that achieve heights of six-to-ten feet. The bushes may be as wide as they are high, with branches that twist and spread. The plant is suitable for garden planting and container culture, where it can be easily espaliered.

The milky sap of fig tree leaves and branches contains a copious latex substance. It can be irritating to human skin and has a bitter, but alkaline, taste. It is one reason deer do not like to eat fig trees (at last – a plant safe from the deer).

Fig leaves are bright green, single, alternate, and large (up to one foot in length). They are deeply lobed with rough hairs on the upper surface and soft hairs on the underside. In summer, the foliage adds a spectacular, tropical feel to the garden.

In the wild, fig trees bear two crops of fruit each year. The first, called the breba crop, develops on the previous season's growth. The second crop is borne in the fall on the new growth and is known as the main crop. On the East End, the breba crop is destroyed by Winter/Spring frosts, so there is one yearly harvest in the fall.

Figs are best when placed in a full-sun location. Partly sunny or shady locations produce leaves but no ripening fruit. Trees can be planted in existing garden soil with some compost added. Young fig trees need to be watered regularly until established. The area around a tree should be mulched to conserve some moisture. Fertilizing is usually required only in container-planted trees, but should not be frequent as excess nitrogen encourages growth of leaves at the expense of fruit.

Fig trees are hardy to about 15° F if they receive winter protection. Erecting a frame over the tree and covering/surrounding it with heavy carpet or tar paper keeps the branches viable through winter. The roots should be kept as dry as possible during winter by the use of deep, but light mulch.

Fig trees have few pests, though gophers seem to love the roots. A single gopher can easily kill a large bush. To protect a tree, place a wire basket around the roots. The trees can also be heavily foraged by blue jays and blackbirds that seem to have affection for the ripening fruit.

I believe success in the Northeast is dependent on selection of cultivars that can survive a marginal climate. Four cultivars seem to do well. "Brown Turkey" is a standard that originated in Provence and produces a small, hardy bush and dark, sweet fruit. "Judy" is an offshoot of the Brown Turkey fig and was originated in Pasadena. It produces both lovely leaves and large fruit. "Blanche" is excellent for areas with short growing seasons and produces a dense, hardy tree and yellow-green fruits that are sweet and lemony flavored. "Ventura" is also a good choice for the Northeast, where it produces a compact bush with large, red-fleshed fruit.

Real Estates by Diane Strecker

The harsh winter weather is having an impact on the East End shoreline where in Sagaponack the shore has become extremely vulnerable to erosion. Just west of Georgica Pond the tides have wreaked havoc and cut very close to homes there. This week's blizzard has just added to the problem. It is, to some degree, the price one pays for living on the water. Still, nothing seems to stop buyers from coming east where one of the first of "The Houses at Sagaponack" just sold for just under $3 million. These high-tech contemporary homes have been designed by architects such as Annabelle Selidorf and Harari and Harari. One Selidorf home is currently on the market for $2,580,000. The home is a two story on 1.4 acres with a heated pool. A single story wing of the house is uniquely connected by a courtyard. It is listed with The Corcoran Group. And for close to the same price, $2,950,000, on Shelter Island, is a three story contemporary home designed by Norman Jaffee. Brazilian cherry, mahogany, Canadian cedar, stone and marble make up this 3000 sq ft, 3 bedroom, 3 bath residence on 2.26 acres. This one has 276 ft of waterfront and spectacular views. It is listed with Allan M. Schineder Associates on Shelter Island.

Also on Shelter Island is The Ashcroft Estate at $10 million. The home and its 2 acres face Coecles Harbor. The home was designed by English architect Julian Williams. It has hillside water views and offers the kind of peace and serenity found only in places like Ram Island. It has a 125 ft dock with float and enough space for up to 3 boats, multiple decks, screening room and gym. It's 5000 sq ft has 6 bedrooms, 6.5 baths, a library and a dramatic entry foyer. It is a short drive to the quaint island village. The estate is listed with Brown Harris Stevens' East Hampton office.

Peconic Bay in Jamesport

Residential, professional, and commercial management company New York East, Inc. is providing a wide array of property management services throughout the Hamptons. Contact owner John Nye at 725-8080 for more information on everything including general maintenance, painting, decorating and utility bill payments.

Along the Lily Pond Lane oceanfront in East Hampton is the Fredrick K. Hollister House designed by James Curtis Lawrence. This estate, a traditional two story shingle style, was built in 1920 on 1.4 acres and is now on the market for $20 million. There are 9 bedrooms and 8.5 baths as well as a separate staff wing with 3 bedrooms. There is also a private studio guest cottage. Brown Harris Brown Stevens is one of the listing brokers.

In Jamesport, for $2,995,000 there is land and a home waiting to be built on the Peconic Bay. The prospective 4500 sq ft home will have a private beach and a water view master suite, a spacious water view living space and granite kitchen. It is set on 1 plus acres and is listed with Prudential Douglas Elliman in Southold.

In Quiogue on 1.7 acres is a 4,380 sq ft traditional, circa 1867. The home is in the historic hamlet and has right of way to the Quantuck Bay. There is a formal entry hall and a private master suite with a fireplace that includes an adjacent study and sunroom. A two bedroom carriage house with surrounding English gardens is also part of the sale for $3,100,000. It is listed with Norma Reynolds Real Estate in Westhampton Beach who reportedly just sold two estates in that area, The Bell Estate in Remsenburg for $6 million and the Ember Estate in Quogue for $9.25 million. It seems as if the millions of dollars keep rolling in over the entire East End.

NUMBERS, SCHMUMBERS
Dear Dan,

One of the "history's mysteries" is why you continue to write articles about America military history. In recent years you have completely confused your readers with misinformation on the Spanish American War and the war in Korea. Now comes Pearl Harbor!

Let's start at the beginning of your most recent "effort". The Japanese aerial attack on December 7, came in two waves – 183 aircraft in the first and 168 in the second. A total of 351 planes – not your 185.

The attack was not directed at the Sixth Fleet in 1941. The US Navy had only the Pacific Fleet and the Atlantic Fleet.

Damage to the US Fleet was indeed severe – of the eight battleships moored in the harbor, four were "sunk" and four damaged. Only the Arizona and the Oklahoma were not salvaged. All others later fought in the war against Japan.

Your figure of more than 3,300 military dead is roughly 1,000 to many. Official figures show 2,335 dead and 1,178 wounded.

I won't worry too much about western imperialism and oil except to point out that in 1941 there was no Indonesia – the Dutch East Indies is the correct reference.

The Japanese attack force did indeed return to Japan – but not to carry forces to the south – that had already been accomplished by several Japanese task forces.

Finally – as to codes and warnings. There were eight US Congressional investigations into this entire affair. The most damning finding against Adm. Husband Kimmel was his failure to conduct long-range aerial recon before December 7. I would ask you to prove your reference to a search plane message reporting the approach of the Japanese Fleet.

If you really want an "investigation scoop" try looking at the Philippines and the actions (?) of General Douglas MacArthur hours after Pearl Harbor was attacked.

But I think a better idea is for you – a master of comedy and satire – to write a serious article on why you feel a need to so badly reference American History. Why not stick to the funny stuff – and leave the facts alone.

Always glad to help.

I asked our intrepid research department to come up with the details of the attack on Pearl Harbor. All were born after that attack. They came up with an attack by 183 planes, which seemed low to me, but that's what they said. As you point out, this was just the first wave. Sigh. –DR

A CORNCOB PIPE AND...
Dear Dan,

This snowman is about twelve feet tall. Built the night of the snow storm by David Falkowski "The Mushroom Man" his wife Katherine Falkowski and there long time friend Justin Frith. The project took a total of about four hours...and can be seen on Fordham Street in Sag Harbor across from the Fire House. On January 23rd we had about forty visitors drive by... some getting out to take photos.... today (24th) we have had people come by as early as 9 a.m. to see the colossus. We would like to issue a challenge to all of Long Island: To build a bigger snowman..... Bring it on!

Peace and be well.

LOOK INTO MY CRYSTAL BALL
Dear Dan,

I am writing another letter to you this time regarding what's going on in India, Indonesia and villages that do not even have street names. The devastation is so beyond words, I can't make one out.

I was away in Florida with my family at the time of the disaster, and didn't have access to TV or bother reading the paper. In a way I'm glad not to have known about the devastation because it would have made my vacation worthless.

When I arrived at home the first thing I did was turn on CNBC to see the deathly tsunami which toll as of now is up to over 155,000 people and still counting. What can we do as a Sag Harbor Village, Town of Southampton, County of Suffolk, etc. to help?

My first instinct was to join the Peace Corp., but with a family I guess it's a lot to ask. But not for some. The brave and courageous people who now serve and have been doing such charitable and honorable contributions for all of us, really need prayer and the help of all of us as a nation, united, to come together as one and have hope in our world. Because the world seems to be falling apart all over the place, between Iraq and the tsunamis, earthquakes, and what's next? Volcano's erupting and causing more devastation? I pray not, but Nostradamos predicted such things. I hope he's wrong.

Police Blotter

Head Case in Joy(less) Ride? We are not exactly sure why he took it. But apparently, a thirty-eight year-old East Hampton man "borrowed" a truck from an Amagansett woman and then rammed it into a tree off Town Lane. The Three Mile Harbor denizen was subsequently airlifted to Stony Brook Hospital where he was treated for a head injury. Go figure. Seems like that should have been his first stop...nonetheless, he's been released from the hospital and now faces charges of unauthorized use of a motor vehicle.

Hot Commodity. Forget affordable housing (that's relative anyway), the hot commodity on the East End are valid registration and inspection stickers – especially after the sweep of the Lumber Lane parking lot where authorities recovered two stolen vehicles... But I digress. It appears such stickers were lifted from a car parked in front of the owner's residence on Osborne Lane in East Hampton. No word as to whether the stickers have been recovered.

Inquiring Minds Want To Know. Why one would have $35,000 in cash at home? Let's see, I can think of a few things...but back to what was reported to police. The money was stashed in a brown leather case, but still it's a large sum not to be under lock and key. Or is that relative, too? The thief gained entrance into the Glider Avenue home in Flanders by kicking in the door. Once inside the burglar stole the brown leather case, a bottle of wine (no doubt, to celebrate the heist) and silver U.S. coins valued at $300.

Tempers Flare, Candy Bags Fly. Mayhem at an East Hampton Market. Call me impatient, but a time spendthrift – I'm not, especially in line at the supermarket. So I can understand this hapless soul's frustration by the long lines at Waldbaum's on Newtown Lane in East Hampton. He did what many perhaps dream of – he vented. Only catch, he no doubt took out his annoyance on the one least responsible. This sounds more like a case for management or better yet a hint – open another register.

* * *

Inhospitable Clime, And We're Not Talking The Weather. According to East Hampton Town Police reports, a homeless man was overheard asking for a blanket outside the Starbucks on Main Street. When confronted by police, he explained that he was leaving town on the next train.

* * *

Sag Harbor Seal? Apparently, the sight of a man bobbing up and down in the frigid waters of Otter Pond warranted a call to the police. When authorities arrived they discovered that the alleged "deep dipper" was wearing a wetsuit. It's a mystery as to why he was in the water in the first place.

* * *

Pressed For An Apology. What's worse? Doing the time or saying you're sorry? A youth accused of damaging a mailbox on Gann Road in Springs was dealt a fitting blow. The owner of the vandalized postbox asked for an apology and assurances that this spirited teen would find other ways to channel his excess energy.

With Friends Like That...Who Needs Enemies? According to Southampton Police reports, a man allegedly threatened an acquaintance in order to score some dough. No dummy, the vic notified authorities and the fiendish friend was charged with grand larceny in the second degree along with harassment in the second degree. Maybe next time he'll ask nicely.
